

Brit. 310 ⁵/₆ (1) Joyce

THE ORIGIN AND HISTORY
OF IRISH NAMES OF PLACES.

BY
P. W. JOYCE, A. M., M. R. I. A.

Triallam timéall na Poëla.

DUBLIN :
McGLASHAN & GILL, UPPER SACKVILLE-STREET.

LONDON : WHITTAKER & CO. ; SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, & CO.

EDINBURGH : JOHN MENZIES.

1869.

DUBLIN :
Printed at the University Press,
BY M. H. GILL.

TO PATRICK JOSEPH KEENAN, ESQ.,

As a small Tribute

TO
GENIUS, PATRIOTISM, AND KINDNESS OF HEART,

THIS BOOK IS DEDICATED,

BY

THE AUTHOR.

PREFACE.

TRIALLAM TIMCHEALL NA FODHLA — LET US WANDER ROUND IRELAND: So wrote the topographer, John O'Dugan, five hundred years ago, when beginning his poetical description of Ireland, and so I address my readers to-day. The journey will be at least a novel one; and to those who are interested in the topography of our country, in the origin of local names, or in the philosophy of language, it may be attended with some instruction and amusement.

The materials for this book were collected, and the book itself was written, in the intervals of serious and absorbing duties. The work of collection, arrangement, and composition, was to me a never-failing source of pleasure; it was often interrupted, and resumed at long intervals; and if ever it involved labour, it was really and truly a labour of love.

I might have illustrated various portions of the book by reference to the local etymologies of other countries ; and this was indeed my original intention : but I soon abandoned it, for I found that the materials I had in hands, relating exclusively to my own country, were more than enough for the space at my disposal.

Quotations from other languages I have, all through, translated into English ; and I have given in brackets the pronunciation of the principal Irish words, as nearly as could be represented by English letters.

The local nomenclature of most countries of Europe is made up of the languages of various races ; that of Great Britain, for instance, is a mixture of Keltic, Latin, Anglo-Saxon, Danish, and Norman French words, indicating successive invasions, and interesting and valuable for that very reason, as a means of historical research ; but often perplexingly interwoven and difficult to unravel. In our island, there was scarcely any admixture of races, till the introduction of an important English element, chiefly within the last three hundred years—for, as I have shown (p. 98), the Danish irruptions produced no appreciable effect ; and accordingly, our place-names are purely Keltic, with the exception of about a thirteenth part, which are English, and mostly of recent introduction. This great name system, begun thousands of years ago by the first wave of population that reached our island, was continued unceasingly from age to age, till it embraced the minutest features of the country in its intricate net-work ; and such as it sprang forth from the minds of our ancestors, it exists almost unchanged to this day.

This is the first book ever written on the subject. In this respect I am somewhat in the position of a settler in a new country, who has all the advantages of priority of claim, but who purchases them too dearly, perhaps, by the labour and difficulty of tracking his way through the wilderness, and clearing his settlement from primeval forest and tangled underwood.

On the journey I have travelled, false lights glimmered, every step of the way, some of which I have pointed out for the direction of future explorers. But I have had the advantage of two safe guides, Dr. John O'Donovan, and the Rev. William Reeves, D. D.; for these two great scholars have been specially distinguished, among the honored labourers in the field of Irish literature, by their success in elucidating the topography of Ireland.

To the Rev. Dr. Reeves I am deeply indebted for his advice and assistance, generously volunteered to me from the very beginning. He examined my proposed plan of the book in the first instance, and afterwards, during its progress through the press, read the proof sheets—all with an amount of attention and care, which could only be appreciated by an actual inspection of the well annotated pages, abounding with remarks, criticisms, and corrections. How invaluable this was to me, the reader will understand when he remembers, that Dr. Reeves is the highest living authority on the subject of Irish topography.

My friend, Mr. William M. Hennessy, was ever ready to place at my disposal his great knowledge of the Irish language, and of Irish topography. And Mr. O'Longan, of the Royal Irish Academy, kindly lent me some important manuscripts, from his private collection, of which I have made use in several parts of the book.

I have to record my thanks to Captain Berdoe A. Wilkinson, R. E., of the Ordnance Survey, for his kindness in procuring permission for me to read the Manuscripts deposited in his Office, Phoenix Park. And I should be guilty of great injustice if I failed to acknowledge the uniform courtesy I experienced from Mr. Mooney, Chief clerk in the same Office, and the readiness with which both he and Mr. O'Lawlor facilitated my researches.

I have also to thank the Council of the Royal Irish Academy for granting me permission—long before I had the honour of being elected a member of that learned body—to make use of their library, and to consult their precious collection of Manuscripts.

The following is a list of the principal historical and topographical works on Ireland published within the last twenty years or so, which I have quoted through the book, and from which I have derived a large part of my materials :—

The Annals of the Four Masters, translated and edited by John O'Donovan, LL. D., M. R. I. A. ; published by Hodges and Smith, Dublin ; the noblest historical work on Ireland ever issued by any Irish publisher—a book which every man should possess, who wishes to obtain a thorough knowledge of the history, topography, and antiquities, of Ireland.

The Book of Rights ; published by the Celtic Society ; translated and edited by John O'Donovan. Abounding in information on the ancient tribes and territories of Ireland.

The Battle of Moylena : Celt. Soc. Translated and edited by Eugene O'Curry, M. R. I. A.

The Battle of Moyrath : Irish Arch. Soc. Translated and edited by John O'Donovan.

The Tribes and Customs of the district of Hy-Many : Irish Arch. Soc. Translated and edited by John O'Donovan.

The Tribes and Customs of the district of Hy-Fiachrach : Irish Arch. Soc. Translated and edited by John O'Donovan.

A description of H-Iar-Connaught. By Roderick O'Flaherty : Irish Arch. Soc. Edited by James Hardiman, M. R. I. A.

The Irish Version of the Historia Britonum of Nennius : Irish Arch. Soc. Translated and edited by James Henthorn Todd, D. D., M. R. I. A.

Archbishop Colton's Visitation of the Diocese of Derry, 1397: Irish Arch. Soc. Edited by the Rev. William Reeves, D. D., M. R. I. A.

Cambrensis Eversus: By Dr. John Lynch, 1662: Celt. Soc. Translated and edited by the Rev. Matthew Kelly.

The Life of St. Columba: By Adamnan: Irish Arch. and Celt. Soc. Edited by the Rev. William Reeves, D. D., M. B., V. P. R. I. A. This book and the next contain a vast amount of local and historical information, drawn from every conceivable source.

Ecclesiastical Antiquities of Down, Connor, and Dromore. Edited by the Rev. William Reeves, D. D., M. B., M. R. I. A.

The Topographical Poems of O'Dugan and O'Heeren: Irish Arch. and Celt. Soc. Translated and edited by John O'Donovan.

The Calendar of the O'Clerys, or the Martyrology of Donegal: Irish Arch. and Celt. Soc. Translated by John O'Donovan. Edited by James Henthorn Todd, D. D., M. R. I. A., F. S. A.; and by the Rev. William Reeves, D. D., M. R. I. A.

The Wars of the Gaedhil with the Gaill. Published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls. Translated and edited by James Henthorn Todd, D. D., &c.

The Chronicon Scotorum. Published under the direction of the Master of the Rolls. Translated and edited by William M. Hennessy, M. R. I. A.

Lectures on the Manuscript Materials of Ancient Irish History: delivered at the Catholic University, by Eugene O'Curry, M. R. I. A. Published by James Duffy, Dublin and London.

The Ecclesiastical Architecture of Ireland; comprising an Essay on the Origin and Uses of the Round Towers of Ireland. By George Petrie, R. H. A., V. P. R. I. A.

Among these, I must not omit to mention that most invaluable work to the Student of Irish Topography and History, "The General Alphabetical Index to the Townlands and Towns, the Parishes and Baronies, of Ireland:" Census, 1861: which was ever in my hands during the progress of the book, and without the help of which, I scarcely know how I should have been able to write it.

I have also consulted, and turned to good account, the various publications of the Ossianic Society, which are full of information on the legends, traditions, and fairy mythology, of Ireland.

On the most ancient forms of the various Irish root-words, and on the corresponding or cognate words in other languages, I have derived my information chiefly from Professor Pictet's work, "Les Origines Indo-Européennes, ou les Aryas Primitifs:" Zeuss' masterly work, Grammatica Celtica: Ebel's Celtic Studies; translated by William K. Sullivan, Ph. D., M. R. I. A.: Irish Glosses; a Mediaeval Tract on Latin Declension; By Whitley Stokes, A. B.: and an Edition, with notes, of Three Ancient Irish Glossaries; By the same accomplished philologist.

The first of these is the fact that the the second is the fact that the
the third is the fact that the the fourth is the fact that the the fifth is the fact that the the sixth is the fact that the the seventh is the fact that the the eighth is the fact that the the ninth is the fact that the the tenth is the fact that the the eleventh is the fact that the the twelfth is the fact that the the thirteenth is the fact that the the fourteenth is the fact that the the fifteenth is the fact that the the sixteenth is the fact that the the seventeenth is the fact that the the eighteenth is the fact that the the nineteenth is the fact that the the twentieth is the fact that the the twenty-first is the fact that the the twenty-second is the fact that the the twenty-third is the fact that the the twenty-fourth is the fact that the the twenty-fifth is the fact that the the twenty-sixth is the fact that the the twenty-seventh is the fact that the the twenty-eighth is the fact that the the twenty-ninth is the fact that the the thirtieth is the fact that the the thirty-first is the fact that the the thirty-second is the fact that the the thirty-third is the fact that the the thirty-fourth is the fact that the the thirty-fifth is the fact that the the thirty-sixth is the fact that the the thirty-seventh is the fact that the the thirty-eighth is the fact that the the thirty-ninth is the fact that the the fortieth is the fact that the the forty-first is the fact that the the forty-second is the fact that the the forty-third is the fact that the the forty-fourth is the fact that the the forty-fifth is the fact that the the forty-sixth is the fact that the the forty-seventh is the fact that the the forty-eighth is the fact that the the forty-ninth is the fact that the the fiftieth is the fact that the the fifty-first is the fact that the the fifty-second is the fact that the the fifty-third is the fact that the the fifty-fourth is the fact that the the fifty-fifth is the fact that the the fifty-sixth is the fact that the the fifty-seventh is the fact that the the fifty-eighth is the fact that the the fifty-ninth is the fact that the the sixtieth is the fact that the the sixty-first is the fact that the the sixty-second is the fact that the the sixty-third is the fact that the the sixty-fourth is the fact that the the sixty-fifth is the fact that the the sixty-sixth is the fact that the the sixty-seventh is the fact that the the sixty-eighth is the fact that the the sixty-ninth is the fact that the the seventieth is the fact that the the seventy-first is the fact that the the seventy-second is the fact that the the seventy-third is the fact that the the seventy-fourth is the fact that the the seventy-fifth is the fact that the the seventy-sixth is the fact that the the seventy-seventh is the fact that the the seventy-eighth is the fact that the the seventy-ninth is the fact that the the eightieth is the fact that the the eighty-first is the fact that the the eighty-second is the fact that the the eighty-third is the fact that the the eighty-fourth is the fact that the the eighty-fifth is the fact that the the eighty-sixth is the fact that the the eighty-seventh is the fact that the the eighty-eighth is the fact that the the eighty-ninth is the fact that the the ninetieth is the fact that the the ninety-first is the fact that the the ninety-second is the fact that the the ninety-third is the fact that the the ninety-fourth is the fact that the the ninety-fifth is the fact that the the ninety-sixth is the fact that the the ninety-seventh is the fact that the the ninety-eighth is the fact that the the ninety-ninth is the fact that the the hundredth is the fact that the CONTENTS.

PART I.

THE IRISH LOCAL NAME SYSTEM.

	PAGE
CHAPTER I.—How the Meanings have been ascertained,	1
CHAPTER II.—Systematic Changes,	16
CHAPTER III.—Corruptions,	45
CHAPTER IV.—False Etymologies,	62
CHAPTER V.—The Antiquity of Irish Local Names,	70

PART II.

NAMES OF HISTORICAL AND LEGENDARY ORIGIN.

CHAPTER I.—Historical Events,	79
CHAPTER II.—Historical Personages,	111
CHAPTER III.—Early Irish Saints,	132
CHAPTER IV.—Legends,	148
CHAPTER V.—Fairies, Demons, Goblins, and Ghosts, . . .	167
CHAPTER VI.—Customs, Amusements, and Occupations, . .	186
CHAPTER VII.—Agriculture and Pasturage,	210
CHAPTER VIII.—Subdivisions and Measures of Land, . . .	221
CHAPTER IX.—Numerical Combinations,	227

PART III.

NAMES COMMEMORATING ARTIFICIAL STRUCTURES.

	PAGE
CHAPTER I.—Habitations and Fortresses,	245
CHAPTER II.—Ecclesiastical Edifices,	287
CHAPTER III.—Monuments, Graves, and Cemeteries,	302
CHAPTER IV.—Towns and Villages,	318
CHAPTER V.—Fords, Weirs, and Bridges,	324
CHAPTER VI.—Roads and Causeways,	338
CHAPTER VII.—Mills and Kilns,	342

PART IV.

NAMES DESCRIPTIVE OF PHYSICAL FEATURES.

CHAPTER I.—Mountains, Hills, and Rocks,	346
CHAPTER II.—Plains, Valleys, Hollows, and Caves,	384
CHAPTER III.—Islands, Peninsulas, and Strands,	399
CHAPTER IV.—Water, Lakes, and Springs,	404
CHAPTER V.—Rivers, Streamlets, and Waterfalls,	409
CHAPTER VI.—Marshes and Bogs,	415
CHAPTER VII.—Animals,	421
CHAPTER VIII.—Plants,	438
CHAPTER IX.—Shape and Position,	463

INDEX OF NAMES,	473
INDEX OF ROOT-WORDS,	527

IRISH NAMES OF PLACES.

PART I.

THE IRISH LOCAL NAME SYSTEM.

CHAPTER I.

HOW THE MEANINGS HAVE BEEN ASCERTAINED.

THE interpretation of a name involves two processes: the discovery of the ancient orthography, and the determination of the meaning of this original form. So far as Irish local names are concerned, the first is generally the most troublesome, while the second, with some exceptions, presents no great difficulty to an Irish scholar.

There are cases however, in which, although we have very old forms of the names, we are still unable to determine the meaning with any degree of certainty. In some of these, it is certain that we are not in possession of the most ancient orthography, and that the old forms handed down to us are nothing more than corruptions of others still older; but in most cases of this kind our ignorance is very probably due to the fact that the root-words of which the names are composed became obsolete before our most ancient manuscripts were written. Names of this class challenge the investigation, not so much of the Irish scholar, as of the general philologist.

With respect to the names occurring in this book, the Irish form and the signification are, generally speaking, sufficiently well known to warrant a certain conclusion; and accordingly, as the reader may observe, I have interpreted them in almost all cases without any appearance of hesitation or uncertainty. There are indeed names in every part of the country, about whose meanings we are still in the dark; but these I have generally avoided, for I believe it to be not only useless but pernicious, to indulge in conjecture where certainty, or something approaching it, is not attainable. I have given my authority whenever I considered it necessary or important; but as it would be impossible to do so in all cases without encumbering the book with references, and in order to remove any doubt as to the correctness of the interpretations, I shall give here a short sketch of the various methods by which the meanings have been ascertained.

I. A vast number of our local names are perfectly intelligible, as they stand in their present anglicised orthography, to any person who has studied the phonetic laws by which they have been reduced from ancient to modern forms. There can be no doubt that the Irish name of Carricknadarriff in the parish of Annahilt, county of Down, is Carraig-na-dtarbh, the rock of the bulls; that Boherboy, the name of a village in Cork, and of several places in other counties, means yellow road, (Bothar-buidhe); or that Knockaunbaun, in Galway and Mayo, signifies white little hill.

But this process requires check and caution; the modern forms, however obvious in appearance, are often treacherous; and whoever relies on them with unwatchful confidence will sooner or later be led into error. Carrick on Suir is what it appears to be, for the Four Masters and other authorities write it Carraigna-Siuire, the rock of the Suir, and it appears to have got its name from a large rock in the bed of the river. But if any one should interpret Carrick on Shannon in the same way, he would find himself mistaken. The old English name of the town was Carrickdrumrusk, as it appears on the Down survey map; but the first part should be Carra, not Carrick, to which it has been corrupted; for the place got its name not from a rock, but from an ancient carra or weir across the Shannon, and accordingly the Four Masters write it Caradh-droma-ruisc, the weir of Drumroosk. Drumroosk itself is the name of several townlands in the north-western counties, and signifies the ridge of the roosk or marsh.

II. In numerous other cases, when the original forms are so far disguised by their English dress, as to be in any degree doubtful, they may be discovered by causing the names to be pronounced in Irish by the natives of the respective localities. When pronounced in this manner, they become in general perfectly intelligible to an Irish scholar—as much so as the names Queenstown and Newcastle are to the reader. Lisnanees is the name of a place near Letterkenny, and whoever would undertake to interpret it as it stands would probably find himself puzzled; but it becomes plain enough when you hear the natives pronounce it with a g in the end, which has been lately dropped:—Lios-na-naosg, the fort of the snipes.

There is a small double lake, or rather two little lakes close together, three miles from Glengarriff in Cork, on the left of the road to Castletown Berehaven.

They are called on the maps Lough Avaul—a name I could never understand, till I heard the local pronunciation, which at once removed the difficulty; the people call it Lough-aw-woul, which any one with a little knowledge of Irish will recognise as Loch-dhabhall, the lake of the two spots, a name that describes it with perfect correctness.

Take as another example Ballylongford, near the Shannon in Kerry: as it stands it is deceptive, the first part of the name being apparently Bally, a town, which in reality it is not. I have a hundred times heard it pronounced by the natives, who always call it in Irish Beal-atha-longphort, the ford-mouth of the fortress. The name was originally applied to the ford over the little river long before the erection of the bridge; and it was so called, no doubt, because it led to the longphort or fortress of Carrigafoyle, two miles distant.

Of this mode of arriving at the original forms of names I have made ample use; I have had great numbers of places named in Irish, either in the very localities, or by natives whom I have met from time to time in Dublin; and in this respect I have got much valuable local information from the national schoolmasters who come twice a year from every part of Ireland to the Central Training Establishment in Dublin. But in this method, also, the investigator must be very cautious; names are often corrupted in Irish as well as in English, and the pronunciation of the people should be tested, whenever possible, by higher authority.

The more intelligent of the Irish-speaking peasantry may often assist the inquirer in determining the meaning also; but here he must proceed with the utmost circumspection, and make careful use of his own experience and judgment. It is very dangerous to depend on the etymologies of the people, who are full of imagination, and will often quite distort a word to meet some fanciful derivation; or they will account for a name by some silly story, obviously of recent invention, and, so far as the origin of the name is concerned, not worth a moment's consideration.

The well-known castle of Carrigogunnell, near the Shannon in Limerick, is universally understood by the inhabitants to mean the candle rock, as if it were Carraig-na-gcoinneall; and they tell a wild legend, to account for the name, about a certain old witch, who in times long ago lived on it, and every night lighted an enchanted candle, which could be seen far over the plain of Limerick, and which immediately struck dead any person who caught even its faintest glimmer. She was at last vanquished and destroyed by St. Patrick, but she and her candle are immortalised in many modern tourist books, and, among others, in Mrs. Hall's "Ireland," where the reader will find a well-told version of the story. But the Four Masters mention the place repeatedly, and always call it Carraig-O-gCoinnell, which admits of no exercise of the imagination, and banishes the old witch and her candle more ruthlessly than even St. Patrick himself, for it means simply the rock of the O'Connells, who were no doubt the original owners.

The meaning of a name, otherwise doubtful, will often be explained by a knowledge of the locality. Quilcagh mountain, in the north-west of Cavan, at the base of which the Shannon rises, is called in Irish by the inhabitants, Cailceach, which literally signifies chalky (Ir. cailc, chalk; Lat. calx); and the first view of the hill will show the correctness of the name; for it presents a remarkably white face, due to the presence of quartz pebbles, which are even brought down in the beds of streams, and are used for garden walks, &c.

Carrantuohill, in Kerry, the highest mountain in Ireland, is always called throughout Munster Carraunthoohill, and the peasantry will tell you that it means an inverted reaping-hook, a name which is apparently so absurd for a mountain, that many reject the interpretation as mere silliness. Yet whoever looks at the peak from about the middle of the Hag's Valley, will see at once that the people are quite right; it descends on the Killarney side by a curved edge, which the spectator catches in profile, all jagged and serrated with great masses of rock projecting like teeth, without a single interruption, almost the whole way down. The word tuathail [thoohill] means literally left-handed; but it is applied to anything reversed from its proper direction or position; and the great peak is most correctly described by the name Carrán-tuathail, for the edge is toothed like the edge of a carrán, or reaping-hook; but it is a reaping-hook reversed, for the teeth are on a convex instead of a concave edge.

III. The late Dr. O'Donovan, while engaged in the Ordnance Survey, travelled over a great part of Ireland, collecting information on the traditions, topography, and antiquities of the country. The results of these investigations he embodied in a series of letters, which are now deposited in the Royal Irish Academy, bound up in volumes, and they form the most valuable body of information on Irish topography in existence.

His usual plan was to seek out the oldest and most intelligent of the Irish-speaking peasantry in each locality, many of whom are named in his letters; and besides numberless other inquiries, he caused them to pronounce the townland and other names, and used their assistance in interpreting them. His interpretations are contained in what are called the Field name Books, a series of several thousand small parchment-covered volumes, now lying tied up in bundles, in the Ordnance Office, Phoenix Park. The names of all the townlands, towns, and parishes, and of every important physical feature in Ireland, are contained in these books, restored to their original Irish forms, and translated into English, as far as O'Donovan's own knowledge, and the information he received, enabled him to determine.

There are, however, numerous localities in every one of the thirty-two counties that he was unable to visit personally, and in these cases, instead of himself hearing the names pronounced, he was obliged to content himself with the various modes of spelling them prevalent in the neighbourhood, or with the pronunciation taken down by others from the mouths of the people, as nearly as they were able to represent it by English letters. He had a wonderful instinct in arriving at the meanings of names, but the information he received from deputies often left him in great doubt, which he not unfrequently expresses; and his interpretations, in such cases, are to be received with caution, based as they often are, on corrupt spelling, or on this doubtful information.

So far as time permitted, I have consulted O'Donovan's letters, and the Field name Books, and I have made full use of the information derived from these sources. I have had frequently to use my own judgment in correcting what other and older authorities proved to be erroneous, but I do not wish, by this remark, to underrate the value and extent of the information I have received from O'Donovan's manuscript writings.

I will give a few illustrations of names recovered in this way. There is a townland in Cavan called Castleterra, which gives name to a parish; the proper pronunciation, as O'Donovan found by conversation with the people, is Cussatirry, representing the Irish Cos-a'-tsiorraigh, the foot of the colt, which has been so strangely corrupted; they accounted for the name by a legend, and they showed him a stone in the townland on which was the impression of a colt's foot.

In the parish of Kilmore, in the same county, the townland of Derrywinny was called, by an intelligent old man, Doire-bhainne, and interpreted, both by him and O'Donovan, the oak grove of the milk; so called, very probably, from a grove where cows used to be milked. Farnamurry, near Nenagh, in Tipperary, was pronounced Farranymurry, showing that the name is much shortened, and really signifies O'Murray's land; and Ballyhoos, in Clonfert, Galway, was stripped of its deceptive garb by being called Bile-chuais, the old tree of the cave.

IV. We have a vast quantity of topographical and other literature, written from a very early period down to the 17th century, in the Irish language, by native writers. Much of this has been lately published and translated, but far the greater part remains still unpublished.

Generally speaking, the writers of these manuscripts were singularly careful to transmit the correct ancient forms of such names of places as they had occasion to mention; and accordingly it may be stated as a rule, subject to occasional exceptions, that the same names are always found spelled in the same way by all our ancient writers, or with trifling differences depending on the period in which they were transcribed, and not affecting the etymology.

At those early times, the names which are now for the most part unmeaning sounds to the people using them, were quite intelligible, especially to skilled Irish scholars, and this accounts for the almost universal correctness with which they have been transmitted to us.

This is one of the most valuable of all sources of information to a student of Irish local names, and it is, of course, of higher authority than those I have already enumerated: with the ancient forms restored, it usually requires only a competent knowledge of the Irish language to understand and interpret them. I have consulted all the published volumes, and also several of the unpublished manuscripts in Trinity College and the Royal Irish Academy. Great numbers of the names occurring in the texts have been translated in foot notes by the editors of the various published manuscripts, and I have generally availed myself of their authority. A list of the principal works already published will be found in the Preface.

Many of the local names occurring in these manuscripts are extinct, but the greater number exist at the present day, though disguised in an English dress, and often very much altered. In every such case it becomes a question to identify the ancient with the modern name—to show that the latter is only a different form of the former, and that they both apply to the same locality. A great deal has been done in this direction by Dr. O'Donovan, Dr. Reeves, and the other editors of the published manuscripts, and I have generally adopted their identifications.

This method of investigation will be understood from the following examples:—At the year 586, it is stated by the Four Masters that Bran Dubh, King of Leinster, gained a battle over the Hy Neill "at the hill over Cluain-Conaire;" and they also record at the year 837, that a great royal meeting took place there, between Niall Caille, king of Ireland, and Felimy (son of Criffan), king of Munster. In a gloss to the Calendar of Aengus the Culdee, at the 16th of September, Cluain-Conaire is stated to be "in the north of Hy Faelain;" and this clearly identifies it with the modern townland of Cloncurry, which gives name to a parish in Kildare, between Kilcock and Innfield, since we know that Hy Faelain was a territory occupying the north of that county. As a further corroboration of this, the old translator of the Annals of Ulster, in rendering the record of the meeting in 837, makes the name Cloncurry.

Once we have arrived at the form Cluain-Conaire, the meaning is sufficiently obvious; it signifies Conary's lawn or meadow; but who this Conary was, we have no means of knowing. (See O'Donovan's Four Masters, Vol. I., p. 457).

Ballymagowan is the name of some townlands in Donegal and Tyrone, and signifies M'Gowan's town. But Ballymagowan, near Derry, is a very different name, as will appear by reference to some old authorities. In Sampson's map it is called Ballygowan, and in the Act 4 Anne, "Ballygan, alias Ballygowan;" while in an Inquisition, taken at Derry in 1605, it is designated by the English name Canons' land. From all this it is obviously the place mentioned in the following record in the Four Masters, at 1537:—"The son of O'Doherty was slain in a nocturnal assault by Rury, son of Felim O'Doherty, at Baile-na-gcananach [Ballynagananagh], in the Termon of Derry." This old Irish name signifies the town of the canons, a meaning preserved in the Inq. of 1605; while the intermediate forms between the ancient and the modern very corrupt name are given in Sampson and in the Act of Anne.

In Adamnan's Life of St. Columba (Lib. ii. Cap. 43) it is related, that on one occasion, while the saint was in Ireland, he undertook a journey, in which "he had for his charioteer Columbanus, son of Echuid, a holy man, and founder of a monastery, called in the Scotie tongue, Snam-Luthir." In the Life of St. Fechin, published by Colgan (Act. SS. p. 136 b.), we are informed that "the place which is called Snamh-Luthir is in the region of Carbre-Gabhra;" and O'Donovan has shown that Carbery-Goura was a territory situated in the north-east of Longford; but the present identification renders it evident that it extended northwards into Cavan.

In an Inquisition taken at Cavan in 1609, the following places are mentioned as situated in the barony of Loughtee:—"Trinitie Island scituate near the Toagher, * * * Clanlaskin, Derry, Bleyncupp and Dromore, Snawlugher and Killevallie" (Ulster Inq. App. vii.); Snawlugher being evidently the ancient Snamh-Luthir. We find these names existing at the present day in the parish of Kilmore, in this barony, near the town of Cavan, in the modern forms of Togher, Clonloskan, Derries, Bleancup, Drummore, Killyvally, Trinity Island; and there is another modern townland called Slanore, which, though more altered than the others, is certainly the same as Snawlugher. If this required further proof, we have it in the fact, that in Petty's map Slanore is called Snalore, which gives the intermediate step.

Snamh-Luthir is very well represented in pronunciation by Snawluahir of the Inquisition. This was shortened by Petty to Snalore without much sacrifice of sound ; and this, by a metathesis common in Irish names, was altered to Slanore. Luthir is a man's name of frequent occurrence in our old MSS., and Snamh-Luthir signifies the swimming-ford of Luthir. This ingenious identification is due to Dr. Reeves. (See Reeves's Adamnan, p. 173.)

V. Some of the early ecclesiastical and historical writers, who used the Latin language, very often when they had occasion to mention places, gave, instead of the native name, the Latin equivalent, or they gave the Irish name accompanied by a Latin translation. Instances of this kind are to be found in the pages of Adamnan, Bede, Giraldus Cambrensis, Colgan, O'Sullivan Beare, and others. Of all the sources of information accessible to me, this, so far as it extends, is the most authentic and satisfactory ; and accordingly I have collected and recorded every example of sufficient importance that I could find.

These men, besides being, many of them, profoundly skilled in the Irish language, and speaking it as their mother tongue, lived at a time when the local names of the country were well understood ; their interpretations are in almost all cases beyond dispute, and serve as a guide to students of the present day, not only in the very names they have translated, but in many others of similar structure, or formed from the same roots. How far this is the case will appear from the following examples.

St. Columba erected a monastery at Durrow, in the King's County, about the year 550, and it continued afterwards during his whole life one of his favourite places. The old Irish form of the name is Dairmag or Dearmagh, as we find it in Adamnan :—"A monastery, which in Scotie is called Dairmag ;" and for its interpretation we have also his authority ; for when he mentions it in Lib. i. Cap. 29, he uses the Latin equivalent, calling it “Roboreti campus,” the plain of the oaks. Bede also gives both the Irish name and the translation in the following passage:—“Before he (Columba) passed over into Britain, he had built a noble monastery in Ireland, which, from the great number of oaks, is in the Scotie language called Dearmagh, the field of the oaks,” (Lib. iii. Cap. 4). Dair, an oak; magh, a plain.

It is hardly necessary to remark that the name was in use ages before the time of St. Columba, who adopted it as he found it; and it has been softened down to the present name by the aspiration of the consonants, Dearmhagh being pronounced Darwah, which gradually sunk to Durrow.

Durrow, on the borders of the Queen's County and Kilkenny, has the same original form and meaning, for we find it so called in O'Clery's Calendar at the 20th of October, where St. Maeldubh is mentioned as “from Dermagh in Hy Duach, in the north of Ossory;” which passage also shows that Durrow, though now included in the Queen's County, formerly belonged to the territory of Idough, in Kilkenny.

There are several townlands in other parts of Ireland called Durrow, Durra, and Durha; and although we have no written evidence of their ancient forms, yet, aided by the pronunciations of the peasantry, and guided by the analogy of Durrow, we cannot hesitate to pronounce that they are all modern forms of Dearmhagh.

We find the same term forming part of the name of Dunderrow, a village and parish in Cork, whose ancient name is preserved in the following entry from the Book of Leinster, a MS. of the 12th century, recording an event that occurred early in the ninth :—

“By them (i. e. the Danes) were demolished Dundermaigi and Inis-Eoganain” (Inishannon) (Todd’s “War of the Gaedhil with the Gaill,” p. 223). Dunderrow signifies the fortress of the oak-plain, and the large dun from which it is called, is still in existence in the townland of Dunderrow, half a mile south of the village.

Drumhome, in Donegal, takes its name from an ancient church originally dedicated to St. Adamnan (see O’Clery’s Calendar at 23rd Sept.). O’Clery and the Four Masters call it Druim-tuama, which seems to imply that they took it to mean the ridge of the tumulus. Adamnan himself, however, mentions it in his Life of St. Columba (Lib. iii. Cap. 23) by the equivalent Latin name Dorsum Tommæ; and Colgan (A. SS. p. 9, n. 6) notices this, adding the words, “for the Irish druim signifies the same as the Latin dorsum.” From which it appears evident that both Adamnan and Colgan regarded Tommæ as a personal name, for if it meant tumulus, the former would, no doubt, have translated it as he did the first part, and the latter would be pretty sure to have a remark on it. The name, therefore, signifies the ridge or long hill of Tomma, a pagan woman’s name.

About four miles from Bantry, on the road to Inchi-geela, are the ruins of Carriganass castle, once a stronghold of the O’Sullivans. O’Sullivan Beare mentions it in his History of the Irish Catholics, and calls it Torrentirupes, which is an exact translation of the Irish name Carraig-an-easa, the rock of the cataract; and it takes its name from a beautiful cascade, where the Ouvane falls over a ledge of rocks, near the castle.

There is another place of the same name in the parish of Ardagh, near Youghal, and another still in the parish of Lackan, Mayo ; while, in Armagh and in Tyrone, it takes the form of Carrickaness—all deriving their name from a rock in the bed of a stream, forming a waterfall.

VI. When the Irish original of a name is not known, it may often be discovered from an old form of the anglicised name. These early English forms are found in old documents of various kinds in the English or Latin language—inquisitions, maps, charters, rolls, leases, &c., as well as in the pages of the early Anglo-Irish historical writers. The names found in these documents have been embalmed on their pages, and preserved from that continual process of corruption, to which modern names have been subjected ; such as they sprang from their Irish source they have remained, while many of the corresponding modern names have been altered in various ways.

They were obviously, in many instances, taken down from the native pronunciation ; and very often they transmit the original sound sufficiently near to suggest at once to an Irish scholar, practised in these matters, the proper Irish form. Drs. O'Donovan and Reeves have made much use of this method, and I have succeeded by means of it, in recovering the Irish forms of many names.

Ballybough, the name of a village near Dublin, is obscure as it stands ; but in an Inquisition of James I. it is called Ballybought, which at once suggests the true Irish name Baile-bocht, poor town ; and Ballybought, the correct anglicised form, is the name of some townlands in Antrim, Kildare, Cork, and Wexford.

Cappancur, near Geashill, King's County, is mentioned in an Inquisition of James I., and spelled Keapancurragh, which very fairly represents the pronunciation of the Irish Ceapach-an-churraigh, the tillage-plot of the marsh.

There is a townland in the parish of Aghaboe, Queen's County, the name of which all modern authorities concur in calling Kilminfoyle. It is certain, however, that the n in the middle syllable has been substituted for l, for it is spelled in the Down survey map Killmullfoyle: this makes it perfectly clear, for it is a very good attempt to write the Irish Cill-Maolphoil, Mulfoyle's Church, Mulfoyle being a man's name of common occurrence, signifying St. Paul's servant.

It would be impossible to guess at the meaning of Ballyboughlin, the name of a place near Clara, King's County, as it now stands; but here also the Down survey opens the way to the original name, by spelling it Bealaboclone, from which it is obvious that the Irish name is Beal-atha-bochluana, the ford of the cow-meadow, the last part, bochluain, cow-meadow, being a very usual local designation.

CHAPTER II.

SYSTEMATIC CHANGES.

THERE are many interesting peculiarities in the process of altering Irish topographical names from ancient to modern English forms; and the changes and corruptions they have undergone are, in numerous instances, the result of phonetic laws that have been in operation from the earliest times, and among different racés of people. Irish names, moreover, afford the only existing record of the changes that Irish words undergo in the mouths of English-speaking people; and, for these reasons, the subject appears to me to possess some importance, both in an antiquarian and philological point of view.

I. Irish Pronunciation preserved. — In anglicising Irish names, the leading general rule is, that the present forms are derived from the ancient Irish, as they were spoken, not as they were written. Those who first committed them to writing aimed at preserving the original pronunciation, by representing it as nearly as they were able in English letters. Generally speaking, this principle explains the alterations that were made in the spelling of names in the process of reducing them from ancient to modern forms; and, as in the Irish language there is much elision and softening of consonants; as, consequently, the same sounds usually take a greater number of letters to represent them in Irish than in English; and since, in addition to this, many of the delicate sounds of the Irish words were wholly omitted, as impossible to be represented in English; for all these reasons the modern English forms of the names are almost always shorter than the ancient Irish.

Allowing for the difficulty of representing Irish words by English letters, it will be found that, on the whole, the ancient pronunciation is fairly preserved. For example, Drummuck, the name of several places in Ulster, preserves almost exactly the sound of the Irish Druim-muc, the ridge of the pigs; and the same may be said of Dungarvan, in Waterford and Kilkenny, the Irish form of which is Dun-Garbhain (Four Mast.), meaning Garvan's fortress. Not quite so well preserved, but still tolerably so, is the sound of Baile-a'-ridire [Ballyariddery], the town of the knight, which is now called Balrothery, near Dublin. In some exceptional cases the attempts to represent the sound were very unsuccessful, of which Ballyagran, the name of a village in Limerick, may be cited as an example; it ought to have been anglicised Bellahagran, the original form being Bel-atha-grean, the ford of the gravel. Cases of this kind are more common in Ulster and Leinster than in the other provinces.

Whenever it so happens that the original combination of letters is pronounced nearly the same in Irish and English, the names are commonly modernized without much alteration either of spelling or pronunciation; as for instance, dun, a fort, is usually anglicised dun or doon; bo, a cow, bo; druim, a long hill, drum; leitir, a wet hill side, letter, &c. In most cases, however, the same letters do not represent the same sounds in the two languages; and accordingly, while the pronunciation was preserved, the original orthography was in almost all cases much altered, and, as I have said, generally shortened. The contraction in the spelling is sometimes very striking, of which Lorum, in Carlow, affords a good illustration, the Irish name being Leamhdhruim, the ridge of the elms.

II. Aspiration.—The most common causes of change in the reduction of Irish names, are aspiration and declipsis; and of the effects of these two grammatical accidents, it will be necessary to give some explanation.

O'Donovan defines aspiration—"The changing of the radical sounds of the consonants, from being stops of the breath to a sibilance, or from a stronger to a weaker sibilance:" so that the aspiration of a consonant results in a change of sound. There are nine of the consonants which, in certain situations, may be aspirated, b, c, d, f, g, m, p, s, and t. The aspiration is denoted either by placing a point over the letter (ċ), or an h after it (ch); by this contrivance letters that are aspirated are still retained in writing, though their sounds are wholly altered. But, as in anglicising names, these aspirated sounds were expressed in English by the very letters that represented them, there was, of course, a change of letters.

B and m aspirated (bh, mh), are both sounded like v or w, and, consequently, where we find bh or mh in an Irish name, we generally have v or w in the English form: examples, Ardvally, in Sligo and Donegal, from the Irish Ard-bhaile, high town; Ballinvana, in Limerick, Baile-an-bhana, the town of the green field; Ballinwully, in Roscommon, Baile-an-mhullaigh, the town of the summit.

Very often they are represented by f in English, as we see in Cloondaff, in Mayo, from Cluain-damh, ox meadow. And not unfrequently they are altogether suppressed, especially in the end of words, or between two vowels, as in Knockdoo, in Wicklow, the same as Knockduff, in other places, Cnoc-dubh, black hill; Knockrour or Knockrower, in the southern counties, which has been made Knockramer, in Armagh, all from Cnoc-reamhar, fat or thick hill.

For c aspirated see next Chapter.

D and g aspirated (dh, gh), have a faint guttural sound not existing in English; it is something like the sound of y (in yore), which occasionally represents it in modern names, as in Annayalla, in Monaghan, Eanaigh-gheala, the white marshes, so called, probably, from whitish grass or white bog flowers. But these letters, which even in Irish are in some situations, not sounded, are generally altogether unrepresented in English names, as in Lisnalee, a common local name in different parts of the country, which represents the Irish Lios-na-laogh, the fort of the calves, a name having its origin in the custom of penning calves at night within the enclosure of the lis; Reana-brone, near Limerick city, Reidh-na-brón, the marshy flat of the mill-stone or quern.

F aspirated (fh) totally loses its sound in Irish, and of course is omitted in English, as in Bauraneag, in Limerick, Barr-an-fhiaigh, the hill top of the deer; Knockanree, in Wicklow, Cnoc-an-fhraoigh, the hill of the heath.

P aspirated (ph) is represented by f, as in Ballin-foyle, the name of a place in Wicklow, and of another near Galway, Baile-an-phoill, the town of the hole; Shanlongford, in Derry, Sean-longphort, the old fortification.

S and t aspirated (sh, th) both sound the same as English h, as in Drumhillagh, a townland name of frequent occurrence in some of the Ulster counties, Druim-shaileach, the ridge of the salallows, which also often takes the form Drumsillagh, where the original s sound is retained; Drumhuskert, in Mayo, Druim-thuaisceart, northern ridge.

III. Eclipsis.—O'Donovan defines eclipsis, "The suppression of the sounds of certain radical consonants by prefixing others of the same organ." When one letter is eclipsed by another, both are retained in writing, but the sound of the former only is heard, that of the latter, which is the letter proper to the word, being suppressed. For instance, when d is eclipsed by n it is written n-d, but the n alone is pronounced. In representing names by English letters, however, the sound only was transmitted, and, consequently, the eclipsed letter was wholly omitted in writing, which, as in case of aspiration, resulted in a change of letter.

“All initial consonants that admit of eclipsis are eclipsed in all nouns in the genitive case plural, when the article is expressed, and sometimes even in the absence of the article” (O’Donovan’s Grammar). S is eclipsed also, under similar circumstances, in the genitive singular. Although there are several other conditions under which consonants are eclipsed, this, with a very few exceptions, is the only case that occurs in local names.

The consonants that are eclipsed are b, c, d, f, g, p, s, t; and each has a special eclipsing letter of its own.

B is eclipsed by m. Lugnamuddagh, near Boyle, Roscommon, represents the Irish Lug-na-mbodach, the hollow of the bodaghs or churls; Knocknamoe, near Abbeyleix, Queen’s county, Cnoc-na-mbo, the hill of the cows; Mullaghnamoyagh, in Derry, Mullach-na-mboitheach, the hill of the byres or cow-houses.

C is eclipsed by g. Knocknaguilliagh, Antrim, is reduced from the Irish Cnoc-na-gcoilleach, the hill of the cocks or grouse; Cloonnagashel, near Ballinrobe, ought to have been anglicised Coolnagashel, for the Four Masters write the name Cuil-na-gcaiseal, the angle of the cashels, or stone forts.

D and g are both eclipsed by n. Killynamph, in the parish of Aghalurcher, Fermanagh, Coill-na-ndamh, the wood of the oxen; Mullananalog in Monaghan, Mullach-na-ndealg, the summit of the thorns or thorn bushes. The eclipsis of g very seldom causes a change, for in this case the n and g coalesce in sound in the Irish, and the g is commonly retained and the n rejected in the English forms; as for instance Cnoc-na-ngabhar [Knock-nung-our], the hill of the goats, is anglicised Knocknagore in Sligo and Down, and Knocknagower in Kerry.

F is eclipsed by bh, which is represented by v in English. Carrignavar, one of the seats of the M'Carthy's in Cork, is in Irish Carraig-na-bhfear, the rock of the men; Altnaveagh, in Tyrone and Armagh, Alt-na-bhfiach, the cliff of the ravens; Lisnaviddoge, near Templemore, Tipperary, Lios-na-bhfheadóg, the lis of the plovers.

P is eclipsed by b. Gortnaboul, in Kerry and Clare, Gort-na-bpoll, the field of the holes; Cornabaste, in Cavan, Cor-na-bpiast, the round hill of the worms or enchanted serpents.

S is eclipsed by t, but this occurs only in the genitive singular, with the article, and sometimes without it. Ballintaggart, the name of several places in various counties from Down to Kerry, represents the Irish Baile-an-tsagairt, the town of the priest; Knockatan-cashlane, near Caherconlish, Limerick, Cnoc-a'-tsean-caisleáin, the hill of the old castle; Kiltenanlea, in Clare, Cill-t Senáin-leith, the church of Senan the hoary; Kiltenan, in Limerick, Cill-t Senain, Senan's church.

T is eclipsed by d. Ballynadolly, in Antrim, Baile-na-dtulach, the town of the little hills; Gortnadullagh near Kenmare, Gort-na-dtulach, the field of the hills; Lisnadurk, in Fermanagh, Lios-na-dtorc, the fort of the boars.

IV. Effects of the Article.—The next series of changes I shall notice are those produced under the influence of the article. Names were occasionally formed by prefixing the Irish definite article an, to nouns, as in case of Anveyerg, in the parish of Aghnamullan, Monaghan, which represents the Irish An-bheith-dhearg, the red birch-tree. When the article was in this manner placed before a word beginning with a vowel, it was frequently contracted to n alone, and this n was often incorporated with its noun, losing ultimately its force as an article, and forming permanently a part of the word. The attraction of the article is common in other languages also, as for instance in French, which has the words lhierre, lendemain, luette, Lisle, Lami, and many others, formed by the incorporation of the article l.

A considerable number of Irish names have incorporated the article in this manner; among others, the following: Naul, the name of a village near Balbriggan. The Irish name is an aill, i. e. the rock or cliff, which was originally applied to the perpendicular rock on which the castle stands—rising over the little river Delvin near the village. The word was shortened to n'aill, and it has descended to us in the present form Naul, which very nearly represents the pronunciation.

The parish of Neddans in Tipperary, is called in Irish na feadáin, the brooks or streamlets, and it took its name from a townland which is now often called Fearann-na-bh feadán, the land of the streamlets. Ninch, in Meath, the inch or island. Naan island, in Lough Erne, the ain or ring, so called from its shape; Nart, in Monaghan, an fheart, the grave.

Nuenna river, in parish of Freshford, Kilkenny—an uaithne, the green river. The river Nore is properly written an Fheoir, i. e. the Feoir; Boate calls it "The Nure or Oure," showing that in his time (1645) the article had not been permanently incorporated. Nobber, in Meath; the obair or work, a name applied according to tradition, to the English fortress erected there. Mageoghegan, in his translation of the "Annals of Clonmacnoise," calls it "the Obber."

It is curious that in several of these places, a traditional remembrance of the use of the article still exists, for the people often employ the English article with the names. Thus Naul is still always called "The Naul," by the inhabitants: in this both the Irish and English articles are used together; but in "The Oil," (the aill or rock) a townland in parish of Edermine, Wexford, and in "The Obber," the Irish article is omitted, and the English used in its place.

While in so many names the article has been incorporated, the reverse process sometimes took place; that is, in the case of certain words which properly began with n, this letter was detached in consequence of being mistaken for the article. The name Uachongbhail is an example of this. The word Congbhail means a habitation, but it was very often applied to an ecclesiastical establishment, and it has been perpetuated in the names of Conwal, a parish in Donegal; Conwal, in parish of Rossinver, Leitrim; Great Connell in Kildare, Cunnagavale* in the parish of Tuogh, Limerick; and other places. With nua (new) prefixed, it became Nuachongbhail, which also exists in several parts of Ireland, in the forms of Noughaval and Nohoval. This word Nuachongbhail is the only example of a topographical term I can point out as having lost the n, it being supposed that the proper word was Uachongbhail and n merely the article. In this mutilated state it exists in the modern names of at least three places, viz.: Oughaval, in parish of Kilmacteige, Sligo; the parish of Oughaval, in Mayo; and Oughaval, in parish of Stradbally, Queen's County; which last is called by its correct name Nuachongbhail, in O'Clery's Calendar at the 15th May.

* This place is called Cunnaghabhail in Irish by the people, and it is worthy of notice, as it points directly to what appears to be the true origin of Congbhail, viz., congabhail. I am aware that in O'Clery's Glossary, Congbhail is derived from combhaile (Con+baile). But in a passage in the "Book of Armagh," as quoted by Mr. W. Stokes in his Irish Glosses, I find the word congabaim used in the sense of habito, and O'Donovan states that congeb = he holds, (Sup. to O'R. Dict.). The infinitive or verbal noun formation is congabail or congabhail, which, according to this use, means habitatio; and as Colgan translates Congbhail by the same word habitatio, there can be, I think, no doubt that congabhail is merely a contracted form of congabhail. Congabhail literally means conceptio, i. e. comprehending or including, and as applied to a habitation, would mean the whole of the premises included in the establishment.

The word Uachongbail has a respectable antiquity in its favour, for "The Book of Uachongbhail" is mentioned in several old authorities, among others the Book of Ballymote, and the Yellow Book of Lecan; the name occurs also in the Four Masters at 1197. Yet there can be no doubt that Nuachongbhail is the original word, for we have the express authority of Colgan that nua not ua is the prefix, as he translates Nuachongbhail by nova habitatio; indeed ua as a prefix could, in this case, have scarcely any meaning, for it never signifies anything but "a descendant."

The separation of the n may be witnessed in operation at the present day in Kerry, where the parish of Nohoval is locally called in Irish sometimes Uachobhail and sometimes an Uachobhail, the n being actually detached and turned into the article. (See O'Donovan's Letter on this parish). That the letter n may have been lost in this manner, appears also to be the opinion of Dr. Graves, for in a paper read before the R. I. Academy in December, 1852, he remarks that the loss of the initial n in the words oidhche (night) and wimhir (a number) "may perhaps be accounted for, by supposing that it was confounded with the n of the article."

As a further confirmation of this opinion regarding the loss of n in Uachongbhail, I may state, that the letter l is sometimes lost in French and Italian words from the very same cause; as in Fr. once (Eng. ounce, an animal), from Lat. lynx; it was formerly written lonce, and in the It. lonza, the l is still retained. Fr. azur (Eng. azure), from lazulus. So also It. uscignuolo, the nightingale, from luscinia, and It. orbacca, a berry, from lauri-bacca.

Another change that has been, perhaps, chiefly produced by the influence of the article, is the omission or insertion of the letter f. The article causes the initial consonants of feminine nouns (and in certain cases those of masculine nouns also) to be aspirated. Now aspirated f is wholly silent; and being omitted in pronunciation, it was, in the same circumstances, often omitted in writing. The Irish name of the river Nore affords an instance of this. Keating and O'Heerin write it Fehir, which is sounded Eoir when the article is prefixed (an Fheoir). Accordingly, it is written without the f quite as often as with it: the Four Masters mention it three times, and each time they call it Eoir. The total silence of this letter in aspiration appears to be, to some extent at least, the cause of its uncertain character. In the case of many words, the writers of Irish seem either to have inserted or omitted it indifferently, or to have been uncertain whether it should be inserted or not; and so we often find it omitted even in very old authorities, from words where it was really radical, and prefixed to other words to which it did not belong. The insertion of f is very common in the South of Ireland. (See O'Donovan's Grammar, p. 30, and O'Brien's Irish Dictionary, p. 466.)

The following words will exemplify these remarks:

from aill, a hill or cliff, we have a great number of names—such as Aillenaveagh, in Galway, áill-na-bh-fiach, the ravens' cliff, &c. But it is quite as often called faill, especially in the South, and this form gives us many names, such as Foilduff, in Kerry and Tipperary, black cliff; Foylatalure, in Kilkenny, the tailor's cliff. Aill I believe to be the most ancient form of this word, for Aill-finn (Elphin) occurs in the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick. So with uar and fuar, cold; and Fahan, on Lough Swilly, is sometimes written Fathain, and sometimes Athain, and Othain, by the Four Masters.

The f has been omitted by aspiration in the names Lughinny, in parish of Killahy, Kilkenny, and Lughanagh, in parish of Killosolan, Galway, both of which represent the Irish an fhliuchaine, the wet land; and also in Ahabeg, in parish of Carrigparson, Limerick, an fhaithche beag, the little green. In these names, the article, after having caused the aspiration of the f, has itself dropped out; but it has held its place in Nurchossy, near Clogher in Tyrone, the Irish name of which is an fhuar-chosach, the cold foot or cold bottom-land, so called probably from its wetness. A place of this name (Fuarchosach), is mentioned by the Four Masters at 1584; but it lies in Donegal.

The f has been affixed to the following words to which it does not radically belong; fan for an, stay; fiolar for iolar, an eagle; fainne for ainne, a ring, &c. It has also been inserted in Culfeightrin, the name of a parish in Antrim, which is properly Cuil-eachtrann, the corner or angle of the strangers. Urney, in Tyrone, is often called Furny, as in the record of Primate Colton's Visitation (1397), and the f is also prefixed in the Taxation of Down, Connor, and Dromore (1306) both showing that the corruption is not of recent origin.

I must notice yet another change produced by the article. When it is prefixed to a masculine noun commencing with a vowel, a t should be inserted between it and the noun, as anam, soul, an tanam, the soul.* In the case of a few names, this t has remained, and has become incorporated with the word, while the article has disappeared. For example, Turagh, in parish of Tuogh, Limerick, i. e. an t-iubhrach, the yew land; Tummery, in parish of Dromore, Tyrone, an t-iomaire, the ridge; so also Tassan, in Monaghan, the assan or little cataract; Tardree, in Antrim, an tard-fhraoigh, the height of the heather. The best known example of this is Tempo, in Fermanagh, which is called in Irish an t-iompodh deisiol, iompodh meaning turning, and deisiol, dextrorsum—from left to right. The place received its name, no doubt, from the ancient custom of turning sun-ways, i. e. from left to right, in worship.

V. Provincial Differences of Pronunciation.—There are certain Irish words and classes of words, which by the Irish-speaking people are pronounced differently in different parts of the country; and, in accordance with the general rule to preserve as nearly as possible the original pronunciation, these provincial peculiarities, as might be anticipated, are reflected in the modern names. This principle is very general, and large numbers of names are affected by it; but I shall notice only a few of the most prominent cases.

In the southern half of Ireland, the Irish letters a and o are sounded in certain situations like ou in the English word ounce.† Gabhar, a goat, is pronounced

* This t is really a part of the article; but the way in which I have stated the case will be more familiar to readers of modern Irish.

† For this and the succeeding provincial peculiarities, see O' Donovan's Grammar, Part I., Chaps. I. and II.

gowr in the South, and gore in the North; and so the name Lios-na-ngabhar (the lis or fort of the goats) is anglicised Lisnagower, in Tipperary, and Lisnagore, in Monaghan. So also Ballynahown, a common townland name in the South (Baile-na-habhann, the town of the river), contrasts with Ballynahone, an equally common name in the North. Fionn (white or fair), is pronounced feoun or fiune in Munster, as in Bawnfoun, in Waterford, and Bawnfune, in Cork, the white or fair-coloured field. In most other parts of Ireland it is pronounced fin, as Findrum in Donegal and Tyrone, which is written by the Four Masters Findruim, white or fair ridge; and this form is often adopted in Munster also, as in Finnahy, in the parish of Upperchurch, Tipperary, Fionn-fhaithche, the white plat or exercise field.

The sound of b aspirated (bh = v) is often sunk altogether in Munster, while it is very generally retained in the other provinces, especially in Connaught. In Derrynanool, in parish of Marshalstown, Cork (Doire-na-n-abhall, the grove of the apples), the bh is not heard, while it is fully sounded in Avalbane, in parish of Clontibret, Monaghan (Abhall-bán, white orchard), and in Killavil, in parish of Kilshalvy, Sligo (Cill-abhaill, the church of the apple tree).

In certain positions adh is sounded like Eng. eye, in the South; thus cladh, which generally means a raised dyke of clay, but sometimes a sunk ditch or fosse, is pronounced cly in the South, as in Clyduff, in Cork, Limerick, and King's County, black dyke. More northerly the same word is made cla or claw, as in Cladowen, near Clones, deep ditch; Clawinch, an island in Lough Ree, the island of the dyke or mound.

Adh in the termination of words is generally sounded like oo in Connaught; thus madadh, a dog, is anglicised maddoo, in Carrownamaddoo, the quarter of the dogs, the name of three townlands in Sligo—while the same name is made Carrownamaddy, in Roscommon and Donegal.

One of the most distinctly marked provincial peculiarities, so far as names are concerned, is the pronunciation that prevails in Munster of the final gh, which is sounded there like English hard g in fig. Great numbers of local names are influenced by this custom. Ballincollig, near Cork, is Baile-an-chullaigh, the town of the boar, and Ballintannig, in the parish of Ballinaboy, Cork, Baile-an-t-seanaigh, the town of the fox. The present name of the river Maigue, in Limerick, is formed on the same principle, its Irish name, as written in old authorities, being Maigh, that is, the river of the plain. Nearly all the Munster names ending in g hard are illustrations of this peculiar pronunciation.

It is owing to a difference in the way of pronouncing the original Irish words, that cluain (an insulated bog meadow) is sometimes in modern names made cloon, sometimes clon, and occasionally clone; that dún (a fortified residence) is in one place spelt doon, in another dun, and in a third down; that in the neighbourhood of Dublin, bally is shortened to bal, in Donegal rath is often made rye or ray, and that disert is sometimes made ister and tristle, &c., &c.

VI. Irish Names with English Plurals.—It is very well known that topographical names are often in the plural number, and this is found to be the case in the nomenclature of all countries. Sometimes in transferring foreign names of this kind into English, the original plurals are retained, but much oftener they are rejected, and replaced by English plurals, as in the well-known examples, Thebes and Athens.

Great numbers of Irish topographical names are in like manner plural in the originals, and there is considerable diversity in anglicising them. Very often the original terminations are retained, as in Milleeny, in the parish of Ballyvourney, Cork, Millínidhe, little hillocks, from meall, a hillock.

Oftener still, the primary plural inflection is rejected, and its place supplied by the English termination. Keeloges is the name of about twenty-six townlands scattered all over Ireland; it means "narrow stripes or plots," and the Irish name is Caológa, the plural of caológ. Carrigans is a common name in the North, and Carrigeens in the South; it is the anglicised form of Carraiginidhe, little rocks. Daars, a townland in parish of Bodenstown, Kildare, means "oaks," from dairghe, plural of dair, an oak. So Mullans and Mullauns, from mulláin, little flat hills; Derreens, from doirinidhe, little derries or oak groves; Bawnoges, from bánóga, little green fields, &c.

In other names, the Irish plural form is wholly or partly retained, while the English termination is superadded; and these double plurals are very common. Killybegs, the name of a village in Donegal, and of several other places in different parts of Ireland, is called by the Four Masters Cealla-beaga, little churches. The plural of cluain (an insulated meadow) is cluainte, which is anglicised Cloonty, a common townland name. With s added, it becomes Cloonties, the name of some townlands, and of a well-known district near Strokestown, Roscommon, which is called Cloonties, because it consists of twenty-four townlands, all whose names begin with Cloon.

VII. Transmission of Oblique Forms.—In the transmission of words from ancient into modern European languages, there is a curious principle very extensive in its operation, which it will be necessary to notice briefly. When the genitive case singular of the ancient word differed materially from the nominative, when, for instance, it was formed by the addition of one or more consonants, the modern word was very frequently derived not from the nominative, but from one of the oblique forms.

All English words ending in ation are examples of this, such as nation: the original Latin is natio, gen. nationis, abl. natione, and the English has preserved the n of the oblique cases. Lat. pars, gen. partis, &c.; here again the English word part retains the t of the genitive.

This principle has been actively at work in the reduction of names from Irish to modern English forms. There is a class of nouns, belonging to the fifth declension in Irish, which form their genitive by adding n or nn to the nominative, as ursa, a door jamb, genitive ursan, dative ursain; and this n is obviously cognate with the n of the third declension in Latin.

Irish names that are declined in this manner very often retain the n of the oblique cases in their modern English forms. For example, Carhoon, the name of a place in the parish of Kilbrogan, Cork, and of two others in the parishes of Beagh and Tynagh, Galway, is the genitive of Carhoo, a quarter of land:—Irish ceathramha, gen. ceathramhan. In this manner, we get the modern forms, Erin, Alban, Rathlin, from Eire, Alba (Scotland), Reachra.

Other forms of the genitive, besides those of the fifth declension are also transmitted. Even within the domain of the Irish language, the same tendency may be observed, in the changes from ancient to modern forms; and we find this very often the case in nouns ending in ach, and which make the gen. in aigh. Tulach, a hill, for instance, is tulaigh in the genitive; this is now very often used as a nominative, not only by speakers, but even by writers of authority, and most local names beginning with Tully are derived from it; such as Tullyallen on the Boyne above Drogheda, which is most truly described by its Irish name Tulaigh-álainn, beautiful ll.

The genitive of teach, a house, is tigh, and at the present day this last is the universal name for a house all over the south of Ireland. Many modern names beginning with Ti and Tee are examples of this; for although the correct form teach is usually given in the Annals, the modern names are derived, not from this, but from tigh, as the people speak it.

There is an old church in King's County, which has given name to a parish, and which is called in the Calendars, Teach-Sarain, Saran's house. St. Saran, who originally founded the church, was descended from Olioll Olum, King of Munster, being of the race of the Dealbhna (O'Clery's Cal. 20th Jan.), and his holy well, Tober Sarain, is still in existence near the church. The people call the church in Irish Tigh-Sarain, and it is from this that the present name Tisaran is derived.

VIII. Translated Names.—Whoever examines the Index list of townlands will perceive, that while a great preponderance of the names are obviously Irish, a very considerable number are plain English words. These English names are of three classes, viz., really modern English names, imposed by English-speaking people, such as Kingstown, Castleblakeney, Charleville; those which are translations of older Irish names; and a third class to which I shall presently return. With the first kind—pure modern English names—I have nothing to do ; I shall only remark that they are much less numerous than might be at first supposed.

A large proportion of those townland names that have an English form, are translations, and of these I shall give a few examples. Watergrasshill in Cork, is universally called by those speaking Irish, Cnocanna-biolraighe, the hill of the watercresses. The Irish name of Cloverhill in parish of Kilmacowen, Sligo, is Cnoc-na-seamar, the hill of the shamrocks ; Skinstown in parish of Rathbeagh, Kilkenny, is a translation of Baile-na-gcroiceann ; and Nutfield in parish of Aghavea, Fermanagh, is correctly translated from the older name Aghnagrow.

Among this class of names, there are not a few whose meanings have been incorrectly rendered ; and such false translations are generally the result of confounding Irish words, which are nearly alike in sound, but different in meaning. Freshford in Kilkenny should have been called Freshfield, the correct equivalent of its Irish name Achad-úr (Book of L.) ; but the present translation was adopted because achadh, a field, was mistaken for ath, a ford. The Irish name of Strokestown in Roscommon, is not Baile-na-mbúille, as the present incorrect name would imply, but Bel-atha-na-mbuille, the ford (not the town) of the strokes or blows. In Castleventry, the name of a parish in Cork, there is a strange attempt at preserving the original signification. Its Irish name is Caislean-na-gaoithe, the castle of the wind, which has been made Castleventry, as if ventry had some connexion in meaning with ventus.

In the parish of Red City in Tipperary, there formerly stood, near the old church, an ancient caher or fort, built of red sandstone, and called from this circumstance, Caherderg or red fort. But as the word caher is often used to signify a city, and as its application to the fort was forgotten, the name came to be translated Red City, which ultimately extended to the parish.

In some of the eastern counties, and especially in Meath, great numbers of names end in the word town; and those derived from families are almost always translated so as to preserve this termination, as Drakestown, Gernonstown, Cruicestown, &c. But several names are anglicised very strangely, and some barbarously, in order to force them into compliance with this custom. Thus the Irish name of Mooretown, in parish of Ardcath, is Baile-an-churraigh, the town of the moor or marsh; Crannaghtown, in parish of Balrathboyne, is in Irish Baile-na-gerannach, the town of the trees. There is a place in the parish of Martry, called Phœnixtown, but which in an Inquisition of James I. is written Phenockstown; its Irish name is Baile-na-bhfionnog, the town of the scald crows, and by a strange caprice of error, a scald crow or finnoge, is here converted into a phoenix!

Many names again, of the present class, are only half translations, one part of the word being not translated, but merely transferred. The reason of this probably was, either that the unchanged Irish part was in such common use as a topographical term, as to be in itself sufficiently understood, or that the translators were ignorant of its English equivalent. In the parish of Ballycarney, Wexford, there is a townland taking its name from a ford, called in Irish Sgairbh-an-Bhreathnaigh, Walsh's scariff or shallow ford, and this, with an obvious alteration, has given name to the barony of Scarawalsh. In Cargygray, in the parish of Annahilt, county of Down, gray is a translation of riacha, and cargy is the Irish for rocks; the full name is Cairge-riacha, grey rocks. The Irish name of Curraghbridge, near Adare in Limerick, is Droichet-na-corra, the bridge of the weir or dam, and it is anglicised by leaving corra nearly unchanged, and translating droichet to bridge. I shall elsewhere treat of the term Eochaill, (yew wood) and its modern forms: there is a townland near Tullamore, King's County, with this Irish name, but now somewhat oddly called the Wood of O. In some modern authorities, the place is called The Owe; so that while chaill was correctly translated wood, it is obvious that the first syllable, eō, was a puzzle, and was prudently left untouched.

IX. Irish names simulating English forms.—The non-Irish names of the third class, already alluded to, are in some respects more interesting than those belonging to either of the other two. They are apparently English, but in reality Irish; and they have settled down into their present forms, under the action of a certain corrupting influence, which often comes into operation when words are transferred (not translated) from one language into another. It is the tendency to convert the strange word, which is etymologically unintelligible to the mass of those beginning to use it, into another that they can understand, formed by a combination of their own words, more or less like the original in sound, but almost always totally different in sense. This principle exists and acts extensively in the English language, and it has been noticed by several writers—among others by Latham, Dr. Trench, and Max Müller, the last of whom devotes an entire lecture to it, under the name of "Popular Etymology." These writers explain by it the formation of numerous English words and phrases; and in their writings may be found many amusing examples, a few of which I shall quote.

The word "beefeater" is corrupted from buffetier, which was applied to a certain class of persons, so called, not from eating beef, but because their office was to wait at the buffet. Shotover Hill, near Oxford, a name which the people sometimes explain by a story of Little John shooting an arrow over it, is merely the French Château Vert. The tavern sign of "The goat and compasses," is a corruption of the older sign-board, "God encompasseth us;" "The cat and the wheel" is "St. Catherine's wheel;" Brazenose College, Oxford, was originally called Brazen-huis, i. e. brew-house, because it was a brewery before the foundation of the college; "La rose des quatre saisons" becomes "The rose of the quarter sessions;" and Bellerophon is changed to "Billy ruffian," &c., &c.

This principle has been extensively at work in corrupting Irish names—much more so indeed than any one who has not examined the subject can imagine; and it will be instructive to give some characteristic instances.

The best anglicised form of coill, a wood, is kill or kyle; in many names, however, chiefly in the north of Ireland, it is changed to the English word field. Cranfield, the name of three townlands in Down, Antrim, and Tyrone, is in Irish Creamhchoill [crav-whill], i. e. wild garlick wood. Leamhchoill [lav-whill], a very usual name, meaning "elm-wood," is generally transformed into the complete English word Longfield, which forms the whole or part of a great many townland names. The conversion of choill into field seems a strange transformation, but every step in the process is accounted for by principles examined in this and next chapter; namely, the conversion of ch into f, the addition of d after l, and the tendency at present under consideration, namely, the alteration of the Irish into an English word. There are many townland names in the South, as well as in the North, in which the same word coill is made hill. Who could doubt but that Coolhill in the parish of The Rower, Kilkenny, means the cool or cold hill; or that Boyhill in the parish of Aghavea, Fermanagh, is the hill of the boys? But the first is really culchoill [coolhill], back wood, and the second buidhechoill [bwec-hill], yellow wood. So also Scaryhill in Antrim, rocky wood; Cullahill in Tipperary and Queen's County, hazel wood; and many others.

Mointeán [moan-thaun], boggy land, and Mointín [moantheen], a little bog, are in the South very generally anglicised mountain, as in Ballynamountain, Kilmountain, Coolmountain, &c., all townland names; and in both North and South, uachtar, upper, is frequently changed to water, as in Ballywater in Wexford, upper town; Ballywatermoy in Antrim, the town of the upper plain; Kilwatermoy in Waterford, the church of the upper plain. Braighid, a gorge, is made broad, as in Knockbroad in Wexford, the hill of the gorge; and the genitive case of conadh, firewood, appears as honey, as in Magherahoney in Antrim, the field of the firewood.

Many of these transformations are very ludicrous, and were probably made under the influence of a playful humour, aided by a little imagination. There is a parish in Antrim called Billy, a townland in parish of Kinawly, Fermanagh, called Molly, and another in parish of Ballinlough, Limerick, with the more ambitious name of Cromwell; but all these sail under false colours, for the first is bile [billē], an ancient tree, the second málaighe [mauly], hill-brows, or braes, and Cromwell is nothing more than crom-choill [crumwhill], stooped or sloping wood.

There is a townland in Kerry and another in Limerick with the formidable name Knockdown, but it has a perfectly peaceful meaning, viz., brown hill. It required a little pressure to force Tuaim-drecon (Four Masters: Drecon's burial mound) into Tomregan, the name of a parish on the borders of Fermanagh and Cavan; Tuaim-coill, the burial mound of the hazel, a name occurring in several parts of Wexford and Wicklow, is very fairly represented in pronunciation by the present name Tomcoyle; and in case of Laithreach-chormaic in Derry (Cormac's larha or house-site), the temptation was irresistible to call it as it is now called, Larrycormick.

There are several places in Tipperary and Limerick called by the Scriptural name Mountsion; but Mount is only a translation of cnoc, and sion, an ingenious adaptation of sidheán [sheeawn], a fairy mount; the full Irish name being Cnoc-a'-tsidheain, fairy-mountain hill. Islafalcon in parish of Ardtramon, Wexford, is not what it appears to be, the island of the falcon, but Oileán-a'-phocáin [Ilaun-a-fuckaun], the island or river-holm of the buck goat; and Lisnamulligan, in parish of Clonduff, Down, is not Mulligan's lis, but Lios-na-bhfaoileagán [Lisnaweelagaun], the lis or fort of the sea gulls, which is evident from the fact that in the Inquisitions it is written Lisnaweelagaun.

We have a very characteristic example of this process in the name of the Phoenix Park, Dublin. This word Phoenix (as applied to our park) is a corruption of fionn-uisg' [feenisk], which means clear or limpid water. It was originally the name of the beautiful and perfectly transparent spring well near the Phoenix pillar, situated just outside the wall of the Viceregal grounds, behind the gate lodge, and which is the head of the stream that supplies the ponds near the Zoological Gardens. To complete the illusion, the Earl of Chesterfield, in the year 1745, erected a pillar near the well, with the figure of a phoenix rising from its ashes on the top of it; and most Dublin people now believe that the Park received its name from this pillar. The change from fionnuisg' to phoenix is not peculiar to Dublin, for the river Finisk, which joins the Blackwater below Cappoquin, is called Phoenix by Smith in his History of Waterford.

X. Retention of Irish written forms.—To the general rule of preserving the pronunciation, there is a remarkable exception of frequent occurrence. In many names the original spelling is either wholly or partly preserved;—in other words, the modern forms are derived from the ancient, not as they were spoken, but as they were written. In almost all such cases, the names are pronounced in conformity with the powers of the English letters; and accordingly, whenever the old orthography is retained, the original pronunciation is generally lost.

This may be illustrated by the word rath, which is in Irish pronounced raw. There are over 400 townland names commencing with this word in the form of ra, rah, raw, and ray; these names are derived from the spoken, not the written originals; and, while the pronunciation is retained, the spelling is lost. There are more than 700 names commencing with the word in its original form, rath, in which the correct spelling is preserved; but the pronunciation is commonly lost, for the word is pronounced rath to rhyme with bath. It is worthy of remark, however, that the peasantry living in or near these places, to whom the names have been handed down orally, and not by writing, generally preserve the correct pronunciation; of which Rathmines, Rathgar, Rathfarnham, and Rathcoole are good examples, being pronounced by the people of the localities, Ra-mines, Ra-gar, Ra-farnham, and Ra-coole.

The principal effect of this practice of retaining the old spelling is, that consonants which are aspirated in the original names, are hardened or restored in the modern pronunciation. To illustrate these principles I have given the following short list of words that enter frequently into Irish names, each containing an aspirated letter; and after each word, the names of two places of which it forms a part. In the first of each pair, the letter is aspirated as it ought to be, but the original spelling is lost; in the second, the orthography is partly or wholly preserved, and the letter is not aspirated, but sounded as it would indicate to an English reader, and the proper pronunciation is lost:—

1. Ath [ǣh], a ford: Agolagh in Antrim, Athgobhlach, forked ford; Athenry in Galway, a corrupt form from Ath-na-riogh (Four Masters), the ford of the kings. 2. Gaoth, wind [gwee]: Mastergeeha, two townlands in Kerry, and Masteragwee in Derry, the master of the wind, so called from the exposed situation of the places; Balgeeth, the name of some places in Meath, windy town, the same as Ballynageeha and Ballynagee in other counties. 3. Tamhnach, a green field [tawnagh]: Fintona in Tyrone, written by the Four Masters Fionn-tamhnach, fair-coloured field; Tamnyagan in the parish of Bannagher, Derry, O'Hagan's field. 4. Damh [dauv], an ox: Davillaun, near Inishbofin, Mayo, ox island;

Madame in the parish of Kimaloda, Cork, Magh-damh, the plain of the oxen.

A remarkable instance of this hardening process occurs in some of the Leinster counties, where the Irish word bōthar [bōher], a road, is converted into batter. This word "batter" is, or was, well understood in these counties to mean an ancient road. It is used in Wexford to signify a lane or narrow road:—"Bater, a lane bearing to a high road." ("Glossary of the dialect of Forth and Bargo." By Jacob Poole: Edited by William Barnes, B. D.) "As for the word Bater, that in English purpozeth a lane bearing to an highway, I take it for a meere Irish worde that crept unawares into the English, through the daily intercourse of the English and Irish inhabitants." (Stanyhurst, quoted in same.)

The word occurs in early Anglo-Irish documents in the form of bothir, or bothyr, which being pronounced according to the powers of the English letters, was easily converted into botter, or batter. It forms a part of the following names:—Batterstown, the name of four townlands in Meath, which were always called in Irish Baile-an-bhóthair, i. e., the town of the road; and anglicised by changing bothar to batter, and translating baile to town. Batterjohn and Ballybatter are also in Meath. Near Drogheda there is a townland called Greenbatter, and another called Yellowbatter, which are called in Irish, Boherglas and Boherboy, having the same meanings as the present names, viz., green road and yellow road.

We have also some examples in and around Dublin, one of which is the well-known name of Stonybatter. Long before the city had extended so far, and while Stonybatter was nothing more than a country road, it was—as it still continues to be—the great thoroughfare to Dublin from the districts lying west and north-west of the city; and it was known by the name of Bothar-na-gcloch [Bohernaglogh], i. e., the road of the stones, which was changed to the modern equivalent, Stonybatter, or Stonyroad. One of the five great roads leading from Tara, which were constructed in the second century, viz., that called Slighe-Cualann, passed through Dublin by Ratoath, and on towards Bray: under the name of Bealach Duibhlinne (the road or pass of the [river] Duibhlinn),* it is mentioned in the following quotation from the "Book of Rights":—

"It is prohibited to him (the king of Erin) to go with a host On Monday over the Bealach Duibhlinne."

The old ford of hurdles, which in these early ages formed the only foot passage across the Liffey, and which gave the name of Ath-cliath to the city, crossed the river where Whitworth bridge now stands, leading from Church-street to Bridge-street;† and the road from Tara to Wicklow must necessarily have crossed the Liffey at this point. There can be, I think, no doubt that the present Stonybatter formed a portion of this ancient road—a statement that is borne out by two independent circumstances. First—Stonybatter lies straight on the line, and would, if continued, meet the Liffey exactly at Whitworth bridge. Secondly—the name Stonybatter, or Bothar-na-gcloch, affords even a stronger confirmation. The most important of the ancient Irish roads were paved with large blocks of stone, somewhat like the

* Duibhlinn was originally the name of that part of the Liffey on which the city now stands.

† Gilbert's "History of Dublin," Vol. I., Chap. ix.

old Roman roads; a fact that is proved by the remains of those that can now be traced. It is exactly this kind of a road that would be called by the Irish—even at the present day—Bohernaglogh; and the existence of this name, on the very line leading to the ancient ford over the Liffey, leaves scarcely any doubt that this was a part of the ancient Slighe Cualann. It must be regarded as a fact of great interest, that the modern-looking name Stonybatter—changed as it has been in the course of ages—descends to us with a history seventeen hundred years old written on its front.

Boosterstown (near Dublin) is another member of the same family; it is merely another form of Basterstown, i.e., Roadtown. In a roll of about the year 1435 it is written in the Anglo-Irish form, Ballybothyr (Baile-an-bhothair—town of the road), of which the present name, Boosterstown, is a kind of half translation. In old Anglo-Irish documents frequent mention is made of a road leading from Dublin to Bray. In a roll of the fifteenth century it is called Bothyr-de-Bree (road of Bray); and it is stated that it was by this road the O'Byrnes and O'Tooles usually came to Dublin.* It is very probable that the Boosterstown road and this Bray road were one and the same, and that both were a continuation of the ancient Slighe Cualann.

* For this information about Boosterstown and Bothyr-de-Bree, I am indebted to Mr. Gilbert.

CHAPTER III.

CORRUPTIONS.

WHILE the majority of names have been modernized in accordance with the principles just laid down, great numbers, on the other hand, have been contracted and corrupted in a variety of ways. Some of these corruptions took place in the Irish language; but far the greatest number were introduced by the English-speaking people in transferring the words from the Irish to the English language. These corruptions are sometimes so extremely irregular and unexpected, that it is impossible to reduce them to rule, or to assign them to any general or uniform influence except mere ignorance, or the universal tendency to contraction. In most cases, however, they are the result of laws or principles, by which certain consonants have a tendency to be substituted for others, or to be placed before or after them, some of which are merely provincial, or attributable to particular races of people, while the influence of others may be traced throughout the whole of Ireland. Some of these laws of corruption have been noticed by Dr. O'Donovan and Dr. Reeves; and I have given expression to others: I have here brought them all, or the most important of them, under one view, and illustrated each by a number of examples.

I. Interchange of l, r, n, m.—The interchange of these letters is common in most languages; it would be easy, if necessary, to give examples from every language of Europe. For instance, the modern name Bologna is a corruption of the ancient Bononia; Palermo of Panormus; Amsterdam of Amstel-dam

(the dam of the river Amstel); Rousillon of Ruscino, &c., &c.

The substitution of these letters, one for another, is also exceedingly common in Irish names: and since this kind of corruption prevails in Irish as well as in English, the names were altered in this particular respect, quite as much in one language as in the other. L appears to have been a favourite letter, and the instances are particularly numerous in which it is substituted for the letter r. The word sruthair [sruher], a stream, forms the whole or part of many names; and generally—but not always—the r has been changed to l, as in Shrule, Shruel, Struell, Sroohill, all names of places in different parts of Ireland. Biorar, watercresses, is now always called in Irish biolar, in which form it enters into several names, as, for example, Aghaviller, a parish in Kilkenny; the Four Masters call it Achadh-biorair, the field of the watercresses, but the present spoken Irish name is Achadh-bhiolair, from which the English form is derived; in Toberburr, near Finglas, Dublin, the original r is retained (Tobar-biorair, watercress well). Loughbrickland in Down was anciently Loch-Bricrenn (Four Masters), the lake of Bricriu, an Ulster chief of the first century, whose name is well known in Irish romance.

N is also sometimes, though not often, changed to l, as in case of Castleconnell near Limerick, which is the castle of the O'Connings, not of the O'Connells, as the present form of the name would indicate.

The change of n to r is one of frequent occurrence, an example of which is the name of Limerick. The Irish name is Luimneach [Liminegh] (Book of Leinster, &c.), which was originally applied to a portion of the river Shannon; as the following passage from an ancient poem on the death of St Cuimmin of Clonfert, quoted by the Four Masters at 661, will show:—

“The Luimneach did not bear on its bosom, of the race of Munster, into Leath Chuinn,

A corpse in a boat so precious as he, Cummine son of Fiachna;”

and the modern name was derived from this, by a change of n to r, and by substituting ck for the guttural in the end. Killery harbour in Connemara is called at the present day in Irish, Caolshaire [Keel-hary], from which the present name is formed; but it should be Caolshaile, or, as it is written more fully by the Four Masters, Caolshaile-ruadh, i. e., the reddish narrow-sea-inlet, a most appropriate name.

In some of the Northern counties, the Irish-speaking people cannot without difficulty articulate the combinations cn and gn, and in order to facilitate the pronunciation they change the n to r. There are about forty-five townlands commencing with the word Crock, all in Ulster, except only a few in Connaught and Leinster; and a person unacquainted with the present peculiarity might be puzzled by this prefix, or might perhaps consider it an anglicised form of cruach, a rick or piled up hill. But all these Crocks are really Knocks, disguised by the change of this one letter. In the Ulster counties, the termination na-grow or nagrew is often found in townland names, as in Tullynagrow in the parish of Muckno, Monaghan; this termination has been similarly corrupted, Tullynagrow being properly Tulaigh-na-gcno, the hill of the nuts.

The change of the l to r is not very common, but it is found in some names. Dromcolliher, in Limerick, is properly Druim-collchoille, the ridge or hill of the hazel wood; and Ballysakeery, a parish in Mayo, is called in Hy Fiachrach, Baile-easa-caioile, the town of the narrow cataract.

The change of m to n, or vice versâ, is not of frequent occurrence. In Rathangan in Kildare, the first n should be m, the correct name as written by the Four Masters being Rath-iomghain, Irgan's rath; and the old rath is still to be seen just outside the town, in a field near the church. The barony of Glenquin in Limerick takes its name from a townland, (now divided into three), near Newcastle; the proper anglicised form would be Glenquim, for the Irish name is Gleann-a'-chuim, the glen of the coom or hollow.

N is changed to m in Kilmainham (near Dublin), which should have been called Kilmainen; it is written Kilmanan by Boate, which shows that it has been corrupted within the last two or three hundred years. It took its name from St. Maighnenn, who was bishop and abbot there early in the seventh century, and who is commemorated in the Calendars at the 18th of December. The termination of the last name seems to have been formed in imitation of the common English topographical suffix ham, home. In Moyacomb, the name of a parish in Wicklow, there is a genuine change of n to m, the Irish name being Magh-da-chon [Moyacon], (Four Masters) the plain of the two hounds; and the same in Slieve Eelim, the name of a mountain range east of Limerick city, which is Sliabh-Eibhlinne in the Annals, Evlin's mountain.

Several of the letter changes now examined have been evidently caused, or at least facilitated, by the difficulty of articulating the same letter twice in immediate succession, and this is a principle of considerable influence in corrupting language. It is easier to say Aghaviller than the right name Aghavirrer, and so on, in several other cases.

II. Change of ch, gh, dh, and th, to f.—The guttural sound of c aspirated (ch) as heard in loch (lough), cannot be pronounced at all by a speaker of mere English; and as it constantly occurs in names, it is interesting to observe the different ways in which English substitutes are provided. When it comes in the end of words, it is often passed over altogether, being neither represented in writing nor in pronunciation, as in Ballymena, in Antrim, which is in Irish Baile-meadhonach, middle town, the same as Ballymenagh in other places. Sometimes, both in the middle and end of words, it is represented by gh, which is often sounded by the English speaking natives, like the proper guttural ch, as in Lough, Lughany, while those who cannot sound the guttural, pronounce it as k or h (Lock, Luhany); but if this gh occur at the end of words, it is commonly not sounded at all, as in Fermanagh, Kilnamanagh, &c. In the middle of words, its place is often supplied by h alone, as in Crohane, the name of a parish in Tipperary, and of several townlands, which represents cruachán, a little rick or hill; and in many cases it is represented by k or ck, as in Foorkill near Athenry, Galway, Fuar-choill, cold wood.

Sometimes it is changed to wh, of which a good example is seen in Glenwhirry, a parish in Antrim, taking its name from the river which runs by Kells, into the Main. It is called Glancurry in the Inquisitions, and its Irish name is Gleann-a'-choire, the glen of the river Curry or Coiré, this last name signifying a cauldron. The cauldron is a deep pool formed under a cataract; and a rocky hill near it, is called Sceir-a'-choire, the rock of the cauldron, which, in the modernized form Skerrywhirry, is the name of a townland.

But there is a more remarkable change which this aspirate undergoes in common with three others. In many names, the sounds of the Irish aspirated letters ch, gh, dh, and th, are converted into the sound of f; and this occurs so frequently as to preclude all supposition of mere accident. Ch is a hard guttural, as heard in the common word lough (loch); gh or dh (both which have the same sound) is the corresponding soft guttural; th is sounded exactly like English h.

The sound of ch is changed to that of f in the following names. Knocktopher in Kilkenny, in Irish Cnoc-a'-tóchair, the hill of the togher or causeway; Luffany, the name of two townlands in Kilkenny, an fhliuchaine, the wet land; Clifden, the name of a well-known village in Galway, is a very modern corruption of Clochán, which is still its Irish name, and which means a beehive-shaped stone house. Lisnafiffy, the name of two townlands in Down, Lios-na-faithche, the lis of the exercise-green; Fidorfe, near Ratoath in Meath, Fidh-dorcha, dark wood.

The change of gh or dh to f is not quite so common, but we find it in Muff, the name of two villages, one in Donegal, and the other in Derry, and of eight townlands, all in the northern half of Ireland; it is merely a form of magh, a plain, and the Irish name, as now pronounced in the localities, comes very near the English form. Balief in Kilkenny is Baile-Aodh, Hugh's town. In some cases, instead of the hard labial f, it is turned into the corresponding soft labial v, as in Lough Melvin in Leitrim; which is called in the Annals, Loch-Meilghe, from Meilghe, King of Ireland in A. M. 4678. Adrivale in the parish of Drishane, Cork, Eadar-ghabhal, the central fork or river-branch.

The change of th to f is often met with. The parish of Tiscoffin in Kilkenny took its name from an old church called Tigh-Scoithin [Tee-scoheen], i. e., Scoithin's house; St. Scoithin was a relative of St. Ailbe of Emly, and erected his primitive church here towards the close of the sixth century (see O'Clery's Cal. 2nd Jan., and Colgan, A. SS., p. 9); Cloonascoffagh, in the parish of Kilmacshalgan, Sligo, Cluain-na-scothach, the meadow of the flowers. In accordance with the same law, a sruthan, or streamlet, is often called sruffane; and this is almost always the case in some of the western counties, as in Ballytrofaun in Sligo, Baile-a'-tsrothain, the town of the streamlet.

The greater number of the alterations noticed under this heading are attributable to the English language; but there are several instances of words and names corrupted similarly by the speakers of Irish. For example, the word chuaidh (past tense of the verb teidh, go), is pronounced foo in the South; and O'Donovan, in one of his Derry letters, informs us, that magh, a plain, is there pronounced in Irish "something between mugh and muff," thereby facilitating or suggesting its conversion into the present name, Muff.

Any one who had studied the English language and its letter-changes, might however anticipate that the Irish gutturals would sometimes be converted into English f. Words transplanted directly from Irish, as might be expected, conform in many instances to the letter-changing laws of the English language; of which names beginning with the word knock may be taken as an illustration. In such English words as "knight," "knife," "knee," &c., the k sound is now entirely omitted in pronunciation; but in the Anglo-Saxon originals cnight, cnif, cneow, both letters—the c hard and the n—were pronounced (Max Müller, “Lectures,” 2nd Series, p. 186). The Irish cnoc is subjected to the same law, for while both letters are heard in Irish, the anglicised form knock is always pronounced nock.

There is a similar compliance with English custom in the change of the Irish gutturals to f. The English language, though it has now no gutturals, once abounded in them, and in a numerous class of words the guttural letters are still retained in writing, as in daughter, laughter, night, straight, plough, &c. While in many such words the sound of the gutturals was wholly suppressed, in others it was changed to the sound of f, as in trough, draught, cough, rough, &c. It is curious that the struggle between these two sounds has not yet quite terminated; it is continued to the present day in Scotland and the North of Ireland, where the peasantry still pronounce such words with the full strong guttural.

It will be seen, then, that when the Irish gutturals are corrupted to f, the change is made, not by accident or caprice, but in conformity with a custom already existing in the English language.

III. Interchange of d and g.—The letters d and g, when aspirated (dh and gh), are sounded exactly alike, so that it is impossible to distinguish them in speaking. This circumstance causes them to be, to some extent, confounded one with the other; in modern Irish, gh is very generally substituted for the older dh. In topographical names, this aspirated g is often hardened or restored (after the manner shown in page 41); and thus many names have been corrupted both in writing and pronunciation, by the substitution of g for dh. But as far as I have examined, I find only one example of the reverse—d for gh.

There are four townlands called Gargrim, in the counties of Donegal, Fermanagh, Leitrim, and Tyrone, which should have been called Gardrim; for the Irish name is Gearrdhruim, i. e. short ridge or hill, and it is correctly anglicised in Gardrum, the name of two townlands in Fermanagh and Tyrone. In exactly the same way was formed Fargrim, the name of two townlands, one in Fermanagh, and the other in Leitrim; it is in Irish, Fardhruim or Fordhruim (outer ridge or hill), in which form it appears in the Four Masters at A. D. 1153; in its correct anglicised form, Fardrum, it occurs in Fermanagh and Westmeath. Drumgonnelly, in the parish and county of Louth, should have been called Drumdonnelly, from the Irish Druim-Dhongaile, the ridge or hill of the Donnellys; Sliguff in Carlow would be more correctly anglicised Sliduff, the Irish name being Slighe-dhubh, black road.

The townland of Rosdagamph, in parish of Inishmacsaint, Fermanagh, is Ros-da-dhamh, the promontory of the two oxen; and by a like corruption Druim-damh, the ridge or hill of the oxen, was converted into Drumgoff, the name of a well-known place in Glenmalure, Wicklow; the same name is correctly anglicised Drumdaff in Mayo and Roscommon. It was a mistake the reverse of this, that gave their present English name to the Ox mountains in Sligo. The Irish name, in all our Annals, is Sliabh-ghamh (which probably means stormy mountain); but the natives, believing it to be Sliabh-dhamh, i. e. the mountain of the oxen, have perpetuated the present incorrect name.

IV. Insertion of t between s and r.—The combination sr is one of rare occurrence in modern European languages; there is not a single word in English, French, German, Greek, or Latin, beginning with it, though many of their words are undoubtedly derived from roots commencing with these two letters.

The Irish language has retained this combination, and in the Irish dictionaries, a considerable number of words will be found commencing with sr. Of these, there are only four that enter often into topographical names. These are sráid, a street; srath, a holm or inch—the lowland along a river; srón, literally a nose, but in a secondary sense, applied to points of hills, promontories, &c.; and sruth, a stream, with its derivatives. It was not to be expected that the English language, which within its own domain does not admit of the union of s and r, would receive these names in all cases without alteration. Of the modern townland names containing the four words just named, the sr has been retained in less than half; in about forty or fifty, it has been changed to shr, a combination admitted in English; and in all the rest it has been corrupted by the insertion of a t.

There are about 170 modern names commencing with str, and many more containing these letters intermediate. In all these, with hardly an exception, the t is a late insertion; for although we have words in Irish beginning with str, there are no names derived from them, except perhaps about half a dozen. The insertion of a t is one of the expedients for avoiding the combination sr, which is found in several languages, and which has been in operation from the earliest times. We find it, for instance, in the O. H. German stroum (Eng. stream), and in the name of the well-known Thracian river Strymon, both of which are derived from a Sanscrit root sru, meaning to flow.*

* See Mr. Whitley Stokes's "Irish Glosses;" and Dr. W. K. Sullivan's Translation of Ebel's "Celtic Studies."

A few names will illustrate these remarks. In Srugreana near Cahersiveen, Kerry (Sruth-greanach, gravelly stream), and in Srananny in parish of Donagh, Monaghan (Srath-an-eanaigh, the strath or holm of the marsh), the initial sr has been retained. It has been changed to shr in Shrough near Tipperary from sruth a stream; and also in Shronedarragh near Killarney, the nose or point of the oak.

In the following names, a t has been inserted:—Strancally, above Youghal, the well-known seat of the Desmonds; whose castle, now in ruins, was built on a point of rock jutting into the Blackwater, called Sron-caillighe, the hag's nose or promontory. Ardstraw, in Tyrone, which the annalists write Ard-sratha, the height of (or near) the river bank; Stradone in Cavan, and Stradowan in Tyrone, deep srath or river holm.

This corruption—the insertion of t—is found more or less all over Ireland, but it prevails more in the Northern counties than anywhere else. In Ulster, the combination sr is scarcely admitted at all; for out of about 170 townland names in all Ireland, commencing with these two letters, there are only twelve in this province, and these are wholly confined to Donegal, Fermanagh, and Monaghan.

V. Addition of d after n, l, and r; and of b after m.—The most extensive agency in corrupting language is contraction, i. e. the omission of letters; first, in pronunciation, and afterwards in writing. This is what Max Müller calls phonetic decay, and he shows that it results from a deficiency of muscular energy in pronunciation, in other words, from laziness. There are cases, however, in which this principle seems to be reversed, that is, in which words are corrupted by the addition of anomalous letters. In English, for instance, a d is often added after n, and in Greek, after both n and l; as in Eng. thunder from Ang. Sax. thunor; cinder from Lat. (cinis) cineris, &c.; and in Gr. anér, gen. andros, &c. This tendency in English is also noticed by Lhuyd in his "Archæologia," (p. 9). Another corruption similar to this, which is found in several languages, is the addition of b after m; as in Eng. slumber from Ang. Sax. slumerian; Fr. nombre from numerus; Lat. comburo, from com, (con), and uro; Gr. gambros for gamros, &c. Max Müller shows, however, that the insertion of these letters is due to the same laziness in pronunciation that causes omission in other cases.*

These corruptions are very frequent in Irish names, viz.:—the letter d is often placed after n and l, and sometimes after r; and the letter b after m. In the following names the d is a mere excrescence, and has been added in recent times:—Terryland, near Galway, which the Four Masters write Tir-oiléin, the district of the island; Killashandra, in Cavan, is in Irish Cill-a'-tsean-ratha, the church of the old rath, and it was so called because the original church was built within the inclosure of an ancient rath; Rathfryland, in Down, is from Rath-Fraoileann, Freelan's rath; Tullyland, in parish of Ballinadee, Cork, Tulaigh-Eilzain, Helena's hill.

D is added after l in the word "field," when this word is an anglicised form of coill, a wood, as in Longfield, Cloncraftfield, &c., which names have been examined at page 37. The same corruption is found in the ancient Welsh personal name, Gildas, and in the Irish name Mac Donald, which are more correctly written Gillas and Macdonnell.

* See Max Müller's "Lectures," 2nd Series, p. 178.

Lastly, d is placed after r in Lifford, which is in Irish Leithbhearr (Four Mast.); this is a comparatively modern corruption; for Spenser, in his "View of the State of Ireland," calls it Castle-liffer. It is to be observed that this adventitious d is placed after n, much oftener than after the other two letters, l and r.

The addition of b to m occurs only seldom; we find it in Cumber or Comber, which is the name of a town in county Down, and of several townlands in different counties, both singly and in composition. It is the Irish comar, the confluence of two waters, and it is correctly anglicised Cummer and Comer in many other names.

All these changes were made in English, but in the Irish language there was once a strong tendency in the same direction. In what is called middle Irish (from the 10th to the 15th century), the custom was very general of using nd for nn. For instance, the word cenn (a head) is old Irish, for it is cited in this form by Zeuss from MSS. of the eighth century; but in middle Irish MSS. it is usually written cend. In all such words, however, the proper termination is restored in modern Irish; and so strong was this countercurrent, that the d was swept away not only from words into which it was incorrectly introduced, but also from those to which it properly and radically belonged. For example, the middle Irish words Aiffrend (the Mass), and muileand (a mill), are spelled correctly with a d, for they are derived from Lat. offerenda, and molendinum; but in modern Irish they are always spelled and pronounced Aiffrionn and muileann.

Some of the words and names cited under this section afford a curious example of the fickleness of phonetic change, and, at the same time, of the regularity of its action. We find words spelled in old Irish with nn; in middle Irish, a d is introduced, and the nn becomes nd; in modern Irish, the d is rejected, and there is a return to the old Irish nn; and in modern anglicised names, the d is reinstated, and nd seems to remain in final possession of the field.

There is a corruption peculiar to the northern and north-western counties, which is very similar to the one now under consideration; namely, the sound of aspirated m (mh = Eng. v) is often represented in the present names by mph. This mode of spelling is probably an attempt to represent the half nasal, half labial-aspirate sound of mh, which an ear unaccustomed to Irish finds it very difficult to catch. Under the influence of this custom, damh, an ox, is converted into damp, as in Derrydamp in parish of Knockbride, Cavan, Doire-damh, the oak grove of the oxen; creamh, wild garlic, is made cramph, as in Annacramph in parish of Grange, Armagh, Eanach-creamha, wild garlic marsh; sceamh, the polypodium or wall fern, becomes scamph, as in Drumnascamph in parish of Clonduff, Down, Druim-na-sceamh, the ridge or hill of the wall fern.

VI. The letter s prefixed to teach and leacht.—The Irish word teach or tigh, a house or church, as I shall show elsewhere, enters extensively into topographical names all over Ireland, in the anglicised forms of ta, tagh, tee, ti, ty, &c. In some of the eastern counties, this word is liable to a singular corruption, viz. the Irish ta or ti is converted into sta or sti, in a considerable number of names, of which the following are examples. Stillorgan is in Irish Tigh-Lorcain, Lorcan's church; and it may have received its name from a church founded by St. Lorcan or Laurence O'Toole, Archbishop of Dublin at the time of the English invasion;

Stabannon in Louth ought to be Tabannon, Bannan's house; Stackallen in Meath is written Teach-collain, by the Four Masters, i. e. Collan's house. So also Stirue in Louth, red house; Stapolin near Baldoyle, Dublin, the house of Paulin, or little Paul; and Stalleen near Donore above Drogheda, is called in the charter of Mellifont granted by John in 1185-6, Teachlenni, i. e. Lenne's house.

This corruption is almost confined to the counties of Dublin, Meath, and Louth; I can find only very few examples outside these counties, among which are, the parish of Stackumny in Kildare, Stakally in parish of Powerstown, Kilkenny, and Tyrella in Down, which is called in the well-known Taxation (1306) published by Dr. Reeves, Staghreel. But its Irish name is Tech-Riaghla (O'C. Cal.), the house of St. Riaghal or Regulus, who is commemorated on 17th Sept. There are altogether in Dublin, Meath, and Louth, about twenty-three names which commenced originally with Ta or Ti, in about two-thirds of which it has become Sta or Sti.

The Irish word leacht, a sepulchral monument, is also, in some of the Ulster counties, corrupted by prefixing an s; for example, Slaghtaverty in parish of Errigal, Londonderry, ought to be Laghtaverty, the monument of the abhartach, or dwarf; and the name is accounted for by a wild legend still told in the locality. So also Slaghtneill, Slaghtmanus (Niall's and Manus's monument), Slaghtfreeden, Slaghtybogy, and perhaps a few others.

It will be recollected that all the corruptions hitherto noticed were found capable of explanation, on some previously established principle of language: the reason of the alteration now under consideration, however, is not so evident. In case of the conversion of ta and ti into sta and sti, I should suggest the following as the probable explanation. The fact that this peculiarity is almost confined to Dublin, Meath, and Louth, renders it likely that it is a Danish corruption. In all the Northern languages there are whole classes of words commencing with st, which mean habitation, place, &c. For example, Ang. Sax. stow, a dwelling place, a habitation; stede, a place, a station: Danish, sted, locus, sedes; stad, urbs, oppidum; stede, statio: Icelandic, stadr, statio, urbs, oppidum; stofa, curta domus; sto, statio. And I may add, that in Iceland, Norway, and other northern countries, several of these words are extensively used in the formation of names of places; of which any one may satisfy himself by only looking over a map of one of these countries.

It appears to me, then, sufficiently natural, that the Northern settlers should convert the Irish ta and ti into their own significant sta and sti. The change was sufficiently marked in character to assimilate to some extent the names to their own familiar local nomenclature, while the alteration of form was so slight, that the words still remained quite intelligible to the Irish population. It would appear more natural to a Dane to say Stabannon (meaning Bannon's house) than Tabannon, and an Irishman would understand quite well what he meant.

This opinion is further supported by these two well-known facts: first, many places on the Eastern coast have Danish names, as Waterford, Leixlip, Howth, Ireland's Eye, &c.; and secondly, the Danes frequently changed the Irish inis, an island, into their own equivalent word, ey, as in the last mentioned name. If it be objected that Tabannon could not be converted on this principle into Stabannon, because the Northern method of forming such names is to place the limiting term first, not last as in Irish (for instance the Irish order is Sta-bannon, but the Northern Bannon-sta); it may be answered that in anglicising Irish names, it is very usual to convert each part of a compound wholly or partly into an English word, leaving the whole at the same time in the original Irish order; as for instance Batterjohn, Castledonovan, Downpatrick, Port Stewart, &c., in which the proper English order would be John's batter, Donovan's Castle, &c.

It is only fair to state, however, that Worsae does not notice this corruption, though in his "Account of the Danes and Norwegians in England, Scotland, and Ireland," he has collected every vestige he could find of the Danish rule in these countries.

Notwithstanding the variety of disturbing causes, and the great number of individual names affected by each, only a small proportion of the whole are corrupted, the great majority being, as already stated, anglicised correctly, or nearly so. When it is considered that there are more than 60,000 townlands in Ireland, and when to the names of these are added the countless names of rivers, lakes, mountains, &c., it will be seen that even a small fraction of all will form a number large enough to give sufficient play to all the corrupting influences enumerated in this chapter.

I have now examined, in this and the preceding chapter, sixteen different sources of change in Irish names, and I have selected these, because they are the most striking and important, as well as the most extensive in their influence. There are other letter changes of a less violent character, such as those caused by metathesis, &c., which I have not thought sufficiently important to notice. The interchange of hard and soft mutes (or tenues and mediæ) is extremely common, but this too, as not causing considerable obscuration of the names, I shall dismiss with a single remark. In the formation of anglicised names from Irish, the change from hard to soft is comparatively rare, while the reverse occurs very frequently. Dulane, near Kells, is an example of the former, its ancient name, as spelled by the Four Masters, being Tuilen or Tulán, i. e. the little tulach or hill; as examples of the latter, it will be sufficient to mention the frequent change of dubh (black) to duff, garbh (rough) to gariff, carraig (a rock) to carrick, &c., in the two former of which the sound of v is converted to that of f, and in the last the sound of g (in got) is changed to that of k. There are also corruptions of an exceptional and unexpected character, which I have not been able to reduce to any principle; but I shall not dwell on them, as the object of these chapters is not so much the examination of individual names, as the development of general laws.

CHAPTER IV.

FALSE ETYMOLOGIES.

IN no department of Irish antiquities have writers indulged to such an extent in vague and useless conjecture, as in the interpretation of local names. Our county histories, topographical dictionaries, tourist handbooks, &c., abound in local etymologies; but if we leave out of the question a few topographical works lately published, it may be safely asserted, that these interpretations are generally speaking false, and a large proportion of them inexpressibly silly. Instead of seeking out the ancient forms of the names, in authentic Irish documents, which in many cases a small amount of inquiry would enable them to do, or ascertaining the pronunciation from natives, writers of this class, ignoring both authority and analogy, either take the names as they stand in English, or invent original forms that they never had, and interpret them, each according to his own fancy, or to lend plausibility to some favourite theory.

There are laws and method in etymology, as well as in other sciences, and I have set forth in the three preceding chapters, the principles by which an inquirer must be guided in the present branch of the subject. But when we see men pronouncing confidently on questions of Irish etymology, who not only have no knowledge of these principles, but who are totally unacquainted with the Irish language itself, we cannot wonder that their conjectures regarding the signification of Irish names are usually nothing better than idle and worthless guesses.

The first who to any extent made use of the etymology of Irish names, as an instrument of historical investigation, was Vallancey. He built whole theories regarding the social condition and religious belief of the early inhabitants of Ireland, chiefly on false etymologies; but his system has been long exploded, and no one would now think of either quoting or refuting his fanciful conjectures. He was succeeded by a host of followers, who in their literary speculations seem to have lost every vestige of judgment and common sense; and the race, though fast dying out under the broad sunlight of modern scholarship, is not yet quite extinct. I shall not notice their etymological fancies through this book, for indeed they are generally quite beneath notice, but I shall bring together in the present chapter a few characteristic examples.

In Ferguson's "River Names of Europe," there are near fifty Irish names, whose meanings are discussed. Of these, a few are undoubtedly correct; there are about twenty on which I am not able to offer an opinion, as I know nothing certain of their etymology, and the author's conjectures are more likely to be wrong than right, for they are founded on the modern forms of the names. A full half are certainly wrong, and of these one example will be sufficient. The name Nenagh (river) is derived from Sansc.nî, to move, Gael. nigh, to wash; but a little inquiry will enable any one to see that Nenagh is not the name of the river at all, but of the town; and that even if it were, it could not be derived from any root beginning with n, since the original name is Aonach, the initial n being merely the Irish article. The real name of the river, which is now almost forgotten, is Owen O'Coffey, the river of the O'Coffeys, the family who anciently inhabited the district.

In Gibson's Etymological Geography, a considerable number of Irish names are explained, but the author was very careful to instance those only whose meanings are obvious, and consequently he is generally right. Yet he calls Inishbofin off the coast of Mayo, Inishbosine, and interprets it Bosine's island! and he confounds Inishcourcy in Down with Ennis-corthy in Wexford, besides giving an erroneous etymology for both.

The Rev. Isaac Taylor, who also deals frequently with Irish names, in a work of great ability, "Words and Places," is more cautious than either. But even he sometimes falls into the same error; for instance he takes Armagh as it stands, and derives it from the preposition ar (on), and magh (a plain), though among the whole range of Irish names, there is scarcely one whose original form (Ard-Macha) is better known.

There is a parish near Downpatrick, taking its name from an old church, now called Inch, i. e. the island, because it was built on a small island or peninsula, on the west side of Strangford Lough. The full name is Inishcourcy; and as it is a historical fact that an abbey was founded there by John de Courcy about the year 1180, it is not to be wondered at that Harris (in his History of Down), and Archdall, fell into the error of believing that the name was derived from him. But an earlier monastery existed there, called Inis-Cumhsraigh [Inishcooscry], Cooscragh's island, long before John de Courcy was born; and this name was gradually corrupted to Inishcourcy, both on account of the curious similarity of sound, and of that chief's connexion with the place.

All this will be rendered evident by reference to the Annals. We find it recorded in the Four Masters, that in 1001 "Sitric son of Amlaff set out on a predatory excursion into Ulidia in his ships; and plundered Kilclief and Inis-Cumhsraigh;" and Tighernach, who died in 1088, records the same event. Moreover, Hugh Maglanha, abbot of Inishcumhsraigh, was one of those who signed the Charter of Newry, a document of about the year 1160.

Dr. Reeves has conjectured, what is highly probable, that the person who gave name to this place was Cumhsrach, one of the sons of Conor Mac Nessa, who succeeded his father as king of Ulster in the first century.

It has been said by a philosopher that words govern men, and we have an excellent example of this in the name of the Black Valley, near Killarney. Many of our guide books, and tourists without number, describe it as something wonderful in its excessive blackness; and among them is one well-known writer, who, if we are to judge by his description, either never saw it all, or wrote from memory.

It may be admitted that the direction of this valley with regard to the sun, at the time of day when visitors generally see it, has some influence in rendering the view of it indistinct; but it certainly is not blacker than many other valleys among the Killarney mountains; and the imagination of tourists is led captive, and they are betrayed into these descriptions of its gloominess, because it has been called the Black Valley, which is not its name at all.

The variety of ways in which the original is spelled by different writers—Coomdhuv, Coomadhuv, Coomydhuv, Cummeendhuv, &c., might lead any one to suspect that there was something wrong in the translation; whereas, if it were intended for black valley, it would be Coomdhuv and nothing else. To an Irish scholar, the pronunciation of the natives makes the matter perfectly clear; and I almost regret being obliged to give it a much less poetical interpretation. They invariably call it Coom-ee-wiv (this perfectly represents the pronunciation, except only the w, where there is a soft guttural that does not exist in English), which will be recognised as Cúm-Ui-Dhuibh, O'Duff's valley. Who this O'Duff was, I have not been able to ascertain.

Clonmacnoise is usually written in the Annals, Cluain-mic-Nois, which has been translated, and is very generally believed to mean, "the retreat of the sons of the noble," a name which it was thought to have received, either because the place was much frequented by the nobility as a retirement in their old age, or because it was the burial place of so many kings and chiefs. But this guess could never be made by any one having the least knowledge of Irish, for in the original name, the two last syllables are in the genitive singular, not in the genitive plural. Nós (gen. nóis), indeed, means noble, but here it is the name of a person, who is historically known, and Cluain-mic-Nois means the meadow of the son of Nos.

Though the Irish name given above is generally used by the Four Masters, yet at 1461 they call the place Cluain-muc-Nois-mic-Fiadhaigh, by which it appears that this Nos's father was Fiadhach [Feeagh], who was a chief belonging to the tribe of the Dealbhna-Eathra (now the barony of Garrycastle in King's County), in whose territory Clonmacnoise was situated. Cluain-muc-Nois would signify the meadow of Nos's pigs; but though this form is used by Colgan in the Tripartite Life, the correct original appears to be Cluain-maccu-Nois, for it is so written in the older Annals, and in the Carlsruhe Manuscript of Zeuss, which is the most ancient, and no doubt the most trustworthy authority of all: this last signifies the meadow of the sons of Nos.

On the road from Inchigeelagh to Gougane Barra in Cork, you pass a lonely little hamlet at a bridge over the Lee, called Ballingeary; and it is no doubt considered a very elegant and imaginative designation, for many of our leading guide books translate it, "The place of the wilderness," though there is not a syllable in the name that signifies either place or wilderness. If the tourist ask the driver of the car, or any other peasant, to pronounce it in Irish, he will hear something like Beal-a-na-geeragh, which represents the Irish Bél-atha-na-gcaerach, the ford of the sheep. The place took this name from a ford, now spanned by the bridge, where the Lee used to be crossed by the mountain sheep, in their passage up and down the valley.

Askeaton in Limerick is transformed to Eas-cead-tinne, in a well-known modern topographical work on Ireland: the writer explains it "The cataract of the hundred fires," and adds, "the fires were probably some way connected with the ritual of the Druids, the ancient Irish Guebres." The name, however, as we find it in many Irish authorities, is Eas-Gephtine, which simply means the cataract of Gephtine, some old pagan chief. The cataract is where the Deel falls over a ledge of rocks near the town.

I may remark here, that great numbers of these fanciful derivations were invented to prove that the ancient Irish worshipped fire. In order to show that the round tower at Balla, in Mayo, was a fire temple, Vallancey changes the name to Beilagh, which he interprets "The fire of fires." But in the Life of St. Mochua, the founder, published by Colgan (at the 30th of March), we are told that before the saint founded his monastery there, in the beginning of the seventh century, the place was called Rosdair-bhreach, i. e. oak-grove; that he enclosed the wells of his religious establishment with a "balla" or wall (a practice common among the early Irish saints); and that "hence the town received the new name Balla, and Mochua himself became known by the cognomen Ballensis."

Aghagower, in the same county, Vallancey also explains "Fire of fires," and with the same object, as a round tower exists there. He was not aware that the original name was Achadh-fobhair, for so it is called in the Four Masters and in the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick : it signifies "the field of the spring," and the place took its name from a celebrated well, which is now called St. Patrick's well. Its name must have been corrupted at an early date, for Duald M'Firbis calls it Achadh-gabhair (Hy Fiachrach, p. 151); but even this does not signify "fire of fires," but a very different thing—"the field of the goat."

Smith, in his History of Cork, states that the barony of Kinalmeaky means "the head of the noble root," from cean head, neal, noble, and meacan, a root. The true form of the name, however, is Cinel-mBece, (O'Heerin), which was originally the name, not of the territory, but of the tribe that inhabited it, and which means "the descendants (cinel) of Bece," who was the ancestor of the O'Mahonys.

In Seward's Topographical Dictionary, it is stated that Baltinglass (in Wicklow) "is derived from Beal-tinne-glas, or the fire of Beal's mysteries, the fires being lighted there by the Druids in honour of the sun;" and the writer of a Guide to Wicklow (Curry, Dublin, 1834), says that it is "Bal-teach-na-glass, or the town of the grey houses;" and he adds, "certainly the appearance of them bears us out in this." This is all pure invention, for neither of the original forms here given is the correct one, and even if it were, it would not bear the meaning assigned, nor indeed any meaning at all. In ancient documents the name is always given Bealach-Chonglais (Dinnsennchus), the pass or road of Cuglas, a personage connected with the locality, about whom there is a curious and very ancient legend; and from this the present name has been corrupted.

CHAPTER V.

THE ANTIQUITY OF IRISH LOCAL NAMES.

IN an essay on Irish local names, it may be expected that I should give some information regarding their antiquity. In various individual cases through this book, I have indicated the date, certain or probable, at which the name was imposed, or the earliest period when it is known to have been in use ; but it may be of some interest to state here some general conclusions, to which the evidence at our command enables us to arrive.

When we wish to investigate the composition and meaning of a name, we are not warranted in going back farther than the oldest actually existing manuscripts in which it is found written, and upon the form given in these, we must found our conclusions. But when our object is to determine the antiquity of the name, or in other words, the period when it was first imposed, we have usually a wider scope and fuller evidence to guide us.

For, first, if the oldest existing manuscript in which the name occurs is known as a fact to have been copied from another still older not now in existence, this throws back the age of the name to at least the date of the transcription of the latter. But secondly, the period when a name happens to be first committed to writing, is no measure of its real antiquity ; for it may have been in use hundreds of years, before being embalmed in the pages of any written document. While we are able to assert with certainty that the name is at least as old as the time of the writer who first mentioned it, the validity of any further deductions regarding its absolute age depends on the authenticity of our history, and on the correctness of our chronology.

I will illustrate these remarks by an example :—The city of Armagh is mentioned in numerous Irish documents, many of them of great antiquity, such as the Book of Leinster, &c., and always in the form Ard-Macha, except when the Latin equivalent is used. The oldest of these is the Book of Armagh, which is known to have been transcribed about the year 807 ; in this we find the name translated by Altitudo Machæ, which determines the meaning, namely, Macha's height.

But in this same Book of Armagh, as well as in many other ancient authorities, the place is mentioned in connexion with St. Patrick, who is recorded to have founded the cathedral about the year 457, the site having been granted to him by Daire, the chief of the surrounding district ; and as the history of St. Patrick, and of this foundation, is accepted on all hands as authentic, we have undoubted evidence that the name existed in the fifth century, though we possess no document of that age in which it is written. And even without further testimony we are able to say that it is older, for it was in use before St. Patrick's arrival, who only accepted the name as he found it.

But here again, history, though of a much less reliable character, comes to our aid. There is an ancient tract called Dinnsenchus which professes to give the origin of the names of the most celebrated localities in Ireland, and, among others, that of Armagh. It is a fact admitting of no doubt, that the place received its name from some remarkable woman named Macha, and the ancient writer in the Dinnsenchus mentions three, from one of whom the name was derived, but does not decide which. The first was Macha the wife of Nevvy, who led hither a colony about 600 years after the deluge; the second, Macha of the golden hair, who founded the palace of Emania, 300 years before the Christian era; and the third, Macha, wife of Crunn, who lived in the reign of Conor Mac Nessa in the first century. The second Macha is recorded to have been buried there, and as she was by far the most celebrated of the three, she it was, most probably, after whom the place was called. We may conclude therefore, with every appearance of certainty, that the name has an antiquity of more than two thousand years.

Following this method of investigation, we are able to determine with considerable precision, the age of hundreds of local names still in use; and as a further illustration, I shall enter into some detail concerning a few of the most ancient authorities that have come down to us.

The oldest writer by whom Irish places are named in detail, is the Greek geographer, Ptolemy, who wrote his treatise in the beginning of the second century. It is well known that Ptolemy's work is only a corrected copy of another written by Marinus of Tyre, who lived a short time before him, and the latter is believed to have drawn his materials from an ancient Tyrian Atlas. The names preserved by Ptolemy are therefore, so far as they are authentic, as old at least as the first century, and with great probability much older.

Unfortunately very few of his Irish names have reached our time.* In the portion of his work relating to Ireland, he mentions over fifty, and of these only about nine can be identified with names existing within the period reached by our history. These are Senos, now the Shannon; Birgos, the Barrow; Bououinda, the Boyne; Rhikina, Rechra or Rathlin; Logia, the Lagan; Nagnatai, Connaught; Isamnion Akron, Rinn Seimhne (now Island Magee); Eblana, Dublin; and another to which I shall return presently.

* The following observations refer to Mercator's Edition, 1605.

The river that he calls Oboka appears, by its position on the map, to be the same as the Wicklow river now so well known as the Ovoca, but this last name has been borrowed from Ptolemy himself, and has been applied to the river in very recent times. Its proper name, as we find it in the annals, is Avonmore, which is still the name of one of the two principal branches that form "The meeting of the Waters."

He places a town called Dounon near the Oboka. It is now impossible to determine the place that is meant by this; but the record is valuable, as the name is obviously the Celtic dun, with the Greek inflexion on postfixed, which shows that this word was in use as a local appellative at that early age.

There is one very interesting example of the complete preservation of a name unchanged, from the time of the Phœnician navigators to the present day. Just outside Eblana, there appears a small island, which is called Edri Deserta on the map, and Edrou Herēmos in the Greek text, i. e. the desert of Edros; which last name, after removing the Greek inflexion, and making allowance for the usual contraction, regains the original form Edar. This is exactly the Irish name of Howth, used in all our ancient authorities, either as it stands, or with the addition of Ben (Ben-Edair, the peak of Edar); still well known throughout the whole country by speakers of Irish; and perpetuated to future time in the names of several villa residences, built within the last few years on the hill.

Some writers have erroneously identified Edrou Herēmos with Ireland's Eye, probably because the former is represented as an island. The perfect coincidence of the name is alone sufficient to prove that Ben Edar is the place meant; but I may add, that to the ancient navigators who collected the information handed down to us by Ptolemy, Ireland's Eye would be barely noticeable, as they sailed along our coast, whereas the bold headland of Ben Edar formed a prominent landmark, certain to be remembered and recorded; and connected as it was with the mainland by a low narrow isthmus, it is no wonder they mistook it for an island. Besides, as we know from our most ancient authorities, Howth was a celebrated locality from the earliest times reached by history or tradition; whereas Ireland's Eye was a place of no note till the seventh century, when it was selected, like many other islands round the coast, as a place of religious retirement, by Christian missionaries.

According to some Irish authorities, the place received the name of Ben-Edair from a 'Tuatha De Danann chieftain, Edar the son of Edgaeth, who was buried there; while others say that it was from Edar the wife of Gann, one of the five Firbolg brothers who divided Ireland between them. The name Howth is Danish. It is written in ancient letters Hofda, Houete, and Howeth, all different forms of the northern word Hoved, a head (Worsae).

The Irish names originally collected for this ancient Atlas, were learned from the natives by sailors speaking a totally different language; the latter delivered them in turn from memory to the compiler, who was of course obliged to represent them by Phœnician letters ; and they were ultimately transferred by Ptolemy into the Greek language. It appears perfectly obvious, therefore, that the names as we find them on Ptolemy's map, must in general be very much distorted from the proper form, as used at the time by the inhabitants.

Enormous changes of form have taken place in our own time, in many Irish names that have been transferred merely from Irish to English, under circumstances far more favourable to correctness. If some old compiler, in drawing a map of Ireland, had removed the ancient Ceann-Léimē (the head of the leap) twenty or thirty miles from its proper position (as Ptolemy does in case of several places), and called it by its present name Slyne Head, and if all intermediate information were lost, it is highly probable that it would never be recognised.

When we reflect on all this, and remember besides that several of the names are no doubt fantastic translations, and that with great probability many of them never existed at all, except in the imagination of the voyagers, we shall cease to be surprised that, out of more than fifty, we are able to identify only about nine of Ptolemy's names.

The next writer after Ptolemy who has mentioned many Irish localities, and whose works remain to us, is a native, namely, Adamnan, who wrote his Life of St. Columba in the seventh century, but the names he records were all in use before the time of Columba in the sixth century. In this work about forty Irish places are mentioned, and here we have Ptolemy's case reversed. The number of names totally lost, or not yet recognised, does not amount to half a dozen. All the rest have been identified in Reeves's edition of Adamnan ; of these, nine or ten, though now obsolete, occur frequently in Irish MSS., and have been in use down to recent times ; the remainder exist at the present day, and are still applied to the localities.

It will not be necessary to detail the numerous writers, whose works are still extant, that flourished at different periods from Adamnan down to the time of Colgan and the O'Clerys ; or the ancient MSS. that remain to us, enumerating or describing Irish localities. It will be enough to say, that in the majority of cases the places they mention are still known by the same names, and have been identified in our own day by various Irish scholars.

The conclusion naturally following from this is, that the names by which all places of any note were known in the sixth and succeeding centuries are, with some exceptions, the very names they bear at the present day.

A vast number of names containing the words dun, rath, lis, caher, carn, fert, cloon, &c., are as old at least as the advent of Christianity, and a large proportion much older ; for all these terms are of pagan origin, though many of them were adopted by Christian missionaries. And in various parts of the book will be found numbers of territorial designations, which were originally tribe names, derived from kings and chieftains who flourished at different times from the foundation of the palace of Emania (300 years B. C.) to the ninth century of the Christian Era.

Those ecclesiastical designations that are formed from the names of saints after such words as kill, temple, donagh, aglish, ti, &c., were generally imposed at various times from the fifth to the eighth or ninth century ; and among these may be enumerated the greater number of our parish names. One example will be sufficient to illustrate this, but many will be found through the book, especially in the next three or four chapters.

We have undoubted historic testimony that the name of Killaspugbrone, near Sligo, is as old as the end of the fifth century. It took its name from one of St. Patrick's disciples, Brón or Bronus, who was also a contemporary and friend of St. Brigid of Kildare, and became bishop of Cassel Irra, in the district of Cuil Irra, the peninsula lying south-west of Sligo. In the Book of Armagh, and in the Tripartite Life, it is stated that after St. Patrick had passed from the Forragh, or assembly place of the sons of Awley, he crossed the Moy at Bartragh, and built the church of Cassel Irra for his disciple, bishop Bronus, the son of Icnus. Bronus died on the 8th June, 512, on which day he is commemorated in O'Clery's Calendar. And the name Killaspugbrone is very little altered from the original Cill-easpuig-Bróin (Four Mast.), the church of bishop Bronus. A ruined little church still remains on the very spot, but it cannot be the structure erected by St. Patrick, for the style of masonry proves that it belongs to a very much later period.

The process of name-forming has continued from those early ages down to recent times. It was in active operation during the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth centuries, for we have great numbers of names derived from English families who settled amongst us during these periods. It has never entirely ceased, and probably never will; for I might point to some names which have been imposed within our own memory.

The number of names given within the last two centuries is so small, however, that we may regard the process as virtually at an end, only subject to those imperceptibly slow changes incidental to language in its cultivated stage. The great body of our townland and other names are at least several hundred years old; for those that we find in the inquiries and maps of the seventeenth century, which are numerous and minute, exist, with few exceptions, at the present day, and generally with very slight alterations of form.

PART II.

NAMES OF HISTORICAL AND LEGENDARY ORIGIN.

CHAPTER I.

HISTORICAL EVENTS.

THE face of the country is a book, which, if it be deciphered correctly and read attentively, will unfold more than ever did the cuneiform inscriptions of Persia, or the hieroglyphics of Egypt. Not only are historical events, and the names of innumerable remarkable persons recorded, but the whole social life of our ancestors—their customs, their superstitions, their battles, their amusements, their religious fervour, and their crimes—are depicted in vivid and everlasting colours. The characters are often obscure, and the page defaced by time, but enough remains to repay with a rich reward the toil of the investigator. Let us hold up the scroll to the light, and decipher some of these interesting records.

One of the most noted facts in ancient Irish and British history, is the migration of colonies from the north of Ireland to the neighbouring coasts of Scotland, and the intimate intercourse that in consequence existed in early ages between the two countries. The first regular settlement mentioned by our historians was made in the latter part of the second century, by Cairbre Riada, son of Conary the second, king of Ireland. This expedition, which is mentioned in most of our Annals, is confirmed by Bede, in the following words:—"In course of time, Britain, besides the Britons and Picts, received a third nation, the Scoti, who issuing from Hibernia under the leadership of Reuda, secured for themselves, either by friendship or by the sword, settlements among the Picts which they still possess. From the name of their commander, they are to this day called Dal-reudini; for in their language, Dal signifies a part." (Hist. Eccl., Lib. I., Cap. 1).

There were other colonies also, the most remarkable of which was that led by Fergus, Angus, and Loarn, the three sons of Erc, in the year 506, which laid the foundation of the Scottish Monarchy. The country colonized by these emigrants was known by the name of Airer-Gaedhil [Arrer-gale], (Wars of GG), i. e. the territory of the Gael or Irish, and the name is still applied to the territory in the shortened form of Argyle, a living record of these early colonizations.

The tribes over whom Carbery ruled were, as Bede and our own Annals record, called from him Dalriada, Riada's portion or tribe; of which there were two—one in Ireland, and the other and more illustrious in Scotland. The name has been long forgotten in the latter country, but still remains in Ireland, though in such a worn down and fragmentary state, that it requires the microscope of the philologist and historian to recognise it.

The Irish Dalriada included that part of Antrim extending from the Ravel water northwards, and the same district is called at the present day, the Route, or by Latin writers Ruta, which is considered by Ussher and O'Flaherty to be a corruption of the latter part of Dal-Riada. If this opinion be correct—and I see no reason to question it—there are few local names in the British islands more venerable for antiquity than this, preserving with little alteration, through the turmoil of seventeen centuries, the name of the first leader of a Scotie colony to the coasts of Alba.

The name of Scotland also commemorates these successive emigrations of Irishmen; it has, moreover, an interesting history of its own, and exhibits one of the most curious instances on record of the strange vicissitudes to which topographical names are often subjected, having been completely transferred from one country to another.

The name Scotia originally belonged to Ireland, and the Irish were called Scoti or Scots; Scotland, which was anciently called Alba, subsequently got the name of Scotia minor, as being peopled by Scots from Ireland, while the parent country was for distinction often called Scotia major. This continued down to about the eleventh century, when Ireland returned to the native name Eire, and "Scotia" was thenceforward exclusively applied to Scotland. The word "land" in both Ire-land and Scot-land was added by the English, the former being obviously a contraction of Eire-land.

That the Scoti were the inhabitants of Ireland would be sufficiently proved by the single quotation given above from Bede; but besides, we find it expressly stated by several other ancient authorities, and Adamnan often uses Hibernia and Scotia synonymously. Thus in his Life of Columba we find the following passage:—"On a certain day the holy man ordered one of his monks named Trenan of the tribe of Mocuruntir, to go on a commission to Scotia (ad Scotiam): The saint answering him, ‘Go in peace; you shall have a favourable and good wind till you arrive in Hibernia (ad Hiberniam); you shall find a man coming to meet you from a distance, who will be the first to seize the prow of your ship in Scotia (in Scotiâ); he will accompany you in your journey for some days in Hibernia,”—Lib. I., Cap. 18.

Many testimonies of this kind might be adduced from other writers; and if another clear proof were necessary, we find it in an ode of the poet Claudian, celebrating a victory of Theodosius over the three nations of the Saxons, the Picts, and the Scots, in which the following passage occurs:—“The Orcades flowed with Saxon gore; Thule became warm with the blood of the Picts; and icy Ierne wept her heaps of (slaughtered) Scots.”

The foundation of the celebrated palace of Eamhuin or Emania, which took place about 300 years before the Incarnation, forms an important epoch; it is the limit assigned to authentic Irish history by the annalist Tighernach, who asserts that all accounts of events anterior to this are uncertain. The following are the circumstances of its origin as given in the Book of Leinster. Three Kings, Aedh-ruadh [Ayroo], Dihorba, and Ciombaeth [Kimbay], agreed to reign each for seven years in alternate succession, and they each enjoyed the sovereignty for three periods, or twenty-one years, when Aedh-ruadh died. His daughter, the celebrated Macha of the golden hair, asserted her right to reign when her father’s turn came, and being opposed by Dihorba and his sons, she defeated them in several battles, in one of which Dihorba was killed, and she then assumed the sovereignty.

She afterwards married the surviving monarch, Kimbay, and took the five sons of Dihorba prisoners. The Ultonians proposed that they should be put to death:—"Not so," said she, "because it would be the defilement of the righteousness of a sovereign in me; but they shall be condemned to slavery, and shall raise a rath around me, and it shall be the chief city of Ulster for ever." The account then gives a fanciful derivation of the name; "And she marked for them the dun with her brooch of gold from her neck," so that the palace was called Eomuin or Eamhuin, from eo, a brooch, and muin, the neck. (See Armagh, p. 71, and O'Curry's Lectures, p. 527.)

The remains of this great palace are situated about a mile and a half west of Armagh, and consist of a circular rath or rampart of earth with a deep fosse, enclosing about eleven acres, within which are two smaller circular forts. The great rath is still known by the name of the Navan Fort, in which the original name is curiously preserved. The proper Irish form is Eamhuin, which is pronounced aven, Emania being merely a latinized form. The Irish article an, contracted as usual to n, placed before this, makes it nEamhuin, the pronunciation of which is exactly represented by Navan.

This ancient palace was destroyed in the year A. D. 332, after having flourished as the chief royal residence of Ulster for more than 600 years; and it would perhaps be difficult to identify its site with absolute certainty, were it not for the singular tenacity with which it has retained its name, through all the social revolutions of sixteen hundred years.

The Red Branch knights of Ulster, so celebrated in our early romances, and whose renown has descended to the present day, flourished in the first century, and attained their greatest glory in the reign of Conor mac Nessa. They were a kind of militia in the service of the monarch, and received their name from residing in one of the houses of the palace of Emania, called Craobh-ruadh [Creeveroe] or the Red branch, where they were trained in valour and feats of arms. The name of this ancient military college is still preserved in that of the adjacent townland of Creeveroe, and thus has descended through another medium, to our own time, the echo of these old heroic days.

Another military organization not less celebrated, of somewhat later date, was that of the Fians or Fenians, or, as they are often called, the Fianna Erin. They flourished in the reign of Cormac mac Art in the third century, and formed a militia for the defence of the throne; their leader was the renowned Finn mac Cumhail [Finn mac Coole], who resided at the hill of Allen in Kildare, and whom Macpherson attempted to transfer to Scotland under the name of Fingal. Finn and his companions are to this day vividly remembered in tradition and legend, in every part of Ireland; and the hills, the glens, and the rocks still attest, not merely their existence, for that no one who has studied the question can doubt, but the important part they played in the government and military affairs of the kingdom.

One of the principal amusements of these old heroes, when not employed in war, was hunting, and during their long sporting excursions, they had certain favourite hills on which they were in the habit of resting and feasting during the intervals of the chase. These hills, most of which are crowned by cars or moats, are called Suidhe-Finn [Seefin], Finn's seat or resting place, and they are found in each of the four provinces; the name appears to have belonged originally to the carns, and to have extended afterwards to the hills.

There is one among the Dublin mountains, a few miles south of Tallaght; another among the Galties; and the fine mountain of Seefin terminates the Ballyhoura range towards the north east, three miles south of Kilfinnane in Limerick. Immediately under the brow of this mountain, reposes the beautiful vale of Glenosheen, whose name commemorates the great poet and warrior, Oisín the son of Finn; and in several of the neighbouring glens, there are rocks, which are associated, in the legends of the peasantry, with the exploits of these ancient warriors. There are also places called Seefin in Cavan, Armagh (near Newry), Down, King's County, Galway, Mayo, and Sligo; while in Tyrone we find Seein, which is the same name, with the f aspirated and omitted. Finn's father, Cumhal [Coole], was slain by Gaul-mac-Morna at the terrible battle of Cnucha or Castleknock, near Dublin: he is believed to have had his residence at Rathcoole (Cumhal's rath), now a small town nine miles south-west of the city; but I cannot find that any vestige of his rath remains.

There are numerous places in every part of Ireland, where, according to tradition, Finn's soldiers used to meet for various purposes; and many of them still retain names that speak plainly enough of these assemblies. In the county Monaghan we find Lisnaveane, that is Lios-na-bhFiann, the fort of the Fianna; in Donegal, Meenavean, where on the meen, or mountain flat, they no doubt rested from the fatigues of the chase; near Killorglin, in Kerry, Derry-nafeana (Derry, an oak wood), and in another part of the same county is a river called Owennafeana; in Westmeath, Carnfyan and Skeanaveane (Skea, a bush); and many other such names.

The name of Leinster is connected with one of the most remarkable of the very early events recorded in the history of Ireland. In the third century before the Christian era, Coffagh Cael Bra murdered his brother, Leary Lorc, monarch of Ireland, and the king's son, Olioll Aine, and immediately usurped the throne. Maen, afterwards called Labhradh Linshagh (Lavra the mariner), son of Olioll, was banished by the usurper; and having remained for some time in the south of Ireland, he was forced to leave the country, and crossed the sea to Gaul. He entered the military service of the king of that country, and after having greatly distinguished himself, he returned to his native land with a small army of foreigners, to wrest the crown from the murderer of his father and grandfather.

He landed at the mouth of the Slaney in Wexford, and after having been joined by a number of followers, he marched to the palace of Dinn Righ [Dinree, the fortress of the kings], in which Coffagh was then holding an assembly with thirty native princes, and a guard of 700 men. The palace was surprised by night, and set on fire, and all its inmates—king, princes, and guards—burned to death. Maen then assumed the sovereignty, and reigned for nineteen years.

The exact description of the annalists identifies very clearly the position of this ancient palace, the great mound of which still exists, though its name has been long forgotten. It is now called Ballyknockan moat, and lies on the west bank of the Barrow, a quarter of a mile south of Leighlinbridge.

Lavra's foreign auxiliaries used a peculiarly shaped broad-pointed spear, which was called laighen [layen]; and from this circumstance, the province in which they settled, which had previously borne the name of Galian, was afterwards called Laighen, which is its present Irish name. The syllable "ster" (for which see farther on) was added in after ages, and the whole word pronounced Laynster, which is the very name given in a state paper of the year 1515, and which naturally settled into the present form Leinster.

Lavra's expedition is mentioned by Tighernach, and by most of the other annalists who treat of that period; but as his adventures have been amplified into a romantic tale in the Book of Leinster,* which is copied by Keating and others, the whole story, if it were not confirmed, would probably be regarded as a baseless legend. The word Gall has, however, been used in the Irish language from the remotest antiquity, to denote a foreigner. For some centuries before the Anglo-Norman invasion it was applied to the Danes, and since that period to the English—both applications being frequent in Irish manuscripts;—but it is obvious that it must have been originally applied to a colony of Gauls, sufficiently numerous and important to fix the word in the language.

We find it stated in Cormac's Glossary, that the word Gall was applied to pillar stones, because they were first erected in Ireland by the Galli, or primitive inhabitants of France; which not only corroborates the truth of the ancient tradition of a Gaulish colony, but proves also that the word Gall was then believed to be derived from this people. Thus the story of Lavra's conquest is confirmed by an independent and unsuspecting circumstance; and as it is recorded by the accurate Tighernach, and falls within the limits of authentic Irish history as fixed by that annalist (about 300 years B. C.), there seems no sufficient reason to doubt its truth.

* For which see O'Curry's Lectures, p. 252.

The little island of Inchagoill in Lough Corrib, midway between Oughterard and Cong, is one of the few examples we have remaining, in which the word Gall is applied in its original signification, i. e. to a native of Gaul; and it corroborates moreover an interesting fragment of our ancient ecclesiastical history. The name in its present form is anglicised from Inis-an-Ghoill, the island of the Gall, or foreigner, but its full name, as given by O'Flaherty and others, is Inis-an-Ghoill-chraibhthigh [crauvy], the island of the devout foreigner. This devout foreigner was Lugnat or Lugnaedon, who, according to several ancient authorities, was the lumaire or pilot of St. Patrick, and the son of his sister Liemania. Yielding to the desire for solitude so common among the ecclesiastics of that early period, he established himself, by permission of his uncle, on the shore of Lough Mask, and there spent his life in prayer and contemplation.

This statement, which occurs in the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, as well as others relating to the family history of the saint, was by many impugned as unworthy of credit, till it received an unexpected confirmation in the discovery on the island, of Lugnaedon's headstone by Dr. Petrie. It is a small pillar stone, four feet high, and it bears in old Roman characters this inscription:—"LIE LUGNAEDON MACC LMENUEH," the stone of Lugnaedon the son of Limenueh, which is the oldest Roman letter inscription ever discovered in Ireland. Near it, is the ruin of a small stone church called Templepatrick, believed—and with good reason according to Petrie—to have been founded by St. Patrick: if this be so, it is probable that it is the very church in which Lugnaedon worshipped.

In several old authorities, this saint's name is written Lugna [Loona], in which form we find it preserved in another locality. Four miles north-north-east from Ballinrobe, in the demesne of Ballywalter, is an ancient church, which is believed, in the traditions of the inhabitants, to be the third church erected in Ireland. Near the burial ground, is a holy well now known by the name of Toberloona, but which is called Tobar-Lugna in Mac Firbis's Poem, i. e. Lugna's well. It is well known that among St. Patrick's disciples, his own nephew was the only one that bore the name of Lugna, and as this well is in the very neighbourhood where he settled, it appears quite clear that it was dedicated to him, and commemorates his name.

We have at least two interesting examples of local names formed by the word Gall as applied to the Danes — Fingall and Donegal. A colony of these people settled in the district lying north of Dublin, between it and the Delvin river, which, in consequence, is called in our authorities (O'C. Cal., Wars of G.G., &c.), Fine-Gall, the territory or tribe of the Galls or Danes; and the same territory is still well-known by the name of Fingall, and the inhabitants are locally called Fingallians.

Donegal is mentioned in several of our Annals, and always in the form of Dun-na-nGall, the fortress of the foreigners. These foreigners must have been Danes, and the name was no doubt applied to an earthen dun occupied by them anterior to the twelfth century ; for we have direct testimony that they had a settlement there at an early period, and the name is older than the Anglo-Norman invasion. Dr. Petrie quotes an ancient Irish poem (Irish Pen. Journal, p. 185), written in the tenth century, by the Tirconnellian bard Flann mac Lonan, in which it is stated that Egnaghan, the father of Donnell, from whom the O'Donnells derive their name, gave his three beautiful daughters, Duvlin, Bebua, and Bebinn, in marriage to three Danish princes, Caithis, Torges, and Tor, with the object of obtaining their friendship, and to secure his territory from their depredations ; and the marriages were celebrated at Donegal, where Egnaghan then resided.

The Annals of Ulster relate that the Danish fortress was burnt in 1159, by Murtough M'Loughlin, king of the Northern Hy Neill : not a vestige of it now remains, but O'Donovan considers it likely, that it was situated at a ford which crossed the river Esk, immediately west of the old castle, and which the Four Masters at 1419 call Ath-na-nGall, the ford of the foreigners.

There are several other places through the country called Donegal or Dungall, having the same general meaning ; we have no evidence to show whether the foreigners were Danes or English ; possibly they were neither.

There are great numbers of names in all parts of Ireland, in which this word Gall commemorates English settlements. Galbally in Limerick is called in the Four Masters, Gallbhaile, English-town, and it probably got its name from the Fitzgeralds, who settled there at an early period ; and there are besides, a dozen other places of the same name, ten of them being in Tyrone and Wexford. Galwally in Down, Galvally in Derry, and Gallavally in Kerry are all the same name, but the b is aspirated as it ought to be.

Ballynagall, Ballynagaul, and Ballygall, all townland names of frequent occurrence, mean also the town of the Englishmen; and I am of opinion that Gaulstown, a name common in Kilkenny and Meath, is a translation of Ballynagall. The terminations gall, nagall, gill and guile, are exceedingly common all over Ireland; the two former generally mean "of the Englishmen," and the two latter "of the Englishman;" Clonegall in Carlow, and Clongall in Meath, signify the Englishmen's meadow; Moneygall in King's County, the shrubbery of the strangers; Clongill in Meath, the Englishman's meadow; Ballinguile and Ballyguile in Cork and Wicklow, the town of the Englishman.

Gallbhuaile [Galvoola] is a name that often occurs in different anglicised forms, meaning English-booley, i. e. a booley or dairy place belonging to English people. In Tipperary it gives name to the parish of Galbooly; in Donegal it is made Galwolie; while in other places we find it changed to Galboley and Galboola.

The mouth of the Malahide river, near Dublin, is called by the strange name of Muldowney, among the people of the locality, a name which, when fully developed under the microscope of history, will remind us of a colony still more ancient than those I have mentioned. The Firbolgs, in their descent on Ireland, divided themselves into three bodies under separate leaders, and landed at three different places. The men of one of these hordes were called Firdomnainn [Firdownan], or the men of the deep pits, and the legendary histories say that they received this name from the custom of digging deeply in cultivating the soil.

The place where this section landed was, for many ages afterwards, called Inver-Domnainn (Book of L.), the river mouth of the Domnanns, and it has been identified, beyond all dispute, with the little bay of Malahide; the present vulgar name Muldowny, is merely a corruption of Maeil-Domnainn, in which the word maeil, a whirlpool, is substituted for the inbher of the ancient name. Thus this fugitive looking name, so little remarkable that it is not known beyond the immediate district, with apparently none of the marks of age or permanency, can boast of an antiquity "beyond the misty space of twice a thousand years;" and preserves the memory of an event otherwise forgotten by the people, and regarded by many as mythological; while, at the same time, it affords a most instructive illustration of the tenacity with which loose fragments of language often retain the footmarks of former generations.

According to our early histories, which in this particular are confirmed by Bede (Lib. I., Cap. 1), the Picts landed and remained some time in Ireland, on their way to their final settlement in Scotland. In the Irish Annals, they are usually called Cruithne [Cruhně], which is also the term used by Adamnan, and which is considered to be synonymous with the word Picti, i. e. painted, from cruith, colour. After their establishment in Scotland, they maintained intimate relations with Ireland, and the ancient Dal-radia, which extended from Newry to the Ravel Water in Antrim, is often called in our Annals the country of the Cruitheni. It is probable that a remnant of the original colony settled there; but we know besides that its inhabitants were descended through the female line, from the Picts; for Irial Glunmore (son of Conall Carnagh), the progenitor of these people, was married to the daughter of Eochy, king of the Picts of Scotland.

Several places in the north of Ireland retain the name of this ancient people. Duncrun, in the parish of Magilligan, Derry, was in old days a place of some notoriety, and contained a church erected by St. Patrick, and a shrine of St. Columba; it must have originally belonged to a tribe of Picts, for it is known in the Annals by the name of Dun-Cruithne (Four Masters), which Colgan (Tr. Th., p. 181, n. 187), translates Arx Cruthænorum, the fortress of the Cruthnians. In the parish of Macosquin, in the same county, there is a townland called Drumcroon, and one in the parish of Devenish, Fermanagh, with the name of Drumcroohen, both of which signify the Picts' ridge.

After the Milesian conquest of Ireland, the vanquished races, consisting chiefly of Firbolgs and Tuatha De Dananns, were kept in a state of subjection by the conquerors, and oppressed with heavy exactions, which became at last so intolerable, that they rose in rebellion, early in the first century, succeeded in overthrowing for a time the Milesian power, and placed one of their own chiefs, Carbery Kincat, on the throne. After the death of this king, the Milesian monarchy was restored through the magnanimity of his son Moran. These helot races, who figure conspicuously in early Irish history, are known by the name of Aitheach-Tuatha [Ahathoocha], which signifies literally, plebeian races; by Latin writers, it has been corrupted to Attacotti, a name now more familiar than the original.

In the barony of Carra, county of Mayo, there is a parish called Touaghty, preserving the name of the ancient territory of Tuath-Aitheachta [Thoo-ahaghta], so written by M'Firbis in "Hy Fiachrach," which received its name from having been anciently occupied by a tribe of Firbolgs; the name signifies the tuath or district of the Attacotti or plebeians.

To travellers on the Great Southern and Western railway, the grassy hill of Knocklong, crowned by its castle ruins, forms a conspicuous object, lying immediately south of the Knocklong station. This hill was, many ages ago, the scene of a warlike gathering, the memory of which is still preserved in the name.

In the middle of the third century, Cormac mac Art, monarch of Ireland, undertook an expedition against Fiacha Muilleathan [Mullahan] king of Munster, to reduce him to submission, and lay the province under additional tribute; and his army marched from Tara unopposed, till they pitched their tents on this hill, which was up to that time called Druim-damhghaire [davary], the hill of the oxen. The Munster king marched to oppose him, and encamped on the slope of the opposite hill, then called Slieve Claire, but now Slievereagh (grey mountain), lying south of Knocklong, and north-east of Kilfinnane.

After a protracted struggle, and many combats in the intervening plain, Cormac, defeated and baffled, was forced to retreat without effecting his object. He was pursued, with great loss, as far as Ossory, and obliged by Fiacha to give security that he would repair the injury done to Munster by this expedition. And from this event the hill of Knocklong received its name, which is in Irish, Cnoc-luinge, the hill of the encampment.

These are the bare historical facts. In the Book of Lecan there is a full narrative of the invasion and repulse; and it forms the subject of a historical tale called the Forbais or Siege of Drom-damhghaire, a copy of which is found in the Book of Lismore. Like all historical romances, it is embellished by exaggeration, and by the introduction of fabulous circumstances; and the druids of both armies are made to play a conspicuous part in the whole transaction, by the exercise of their magical powers.

It is related that Cormac's druids dried up, by their incantations, the springs, lakes, and rivers of the district, so that the men and horses of the Munster army were dying of thirst. Fiacha, in this great distress, sent for Mogh-Ruith [Mō-rih], the most celebrated druid of his time, who lived at Dairbhre [Darvery], now Valentia island in Kerry; and he came, and the men of Munster besought him to relieve them from the plague of thirst.

Mogh-Ruith called for his disciple Canvore, and said to him, "Bring me my magical spear;" and his magical spear was brought, and he cast it high in the air, and told Canvore to dig up the ground where it fell. "What shall be my reward?" said Canvore; "Your name shall be for ever on the stream," said Mogh-Ruith. Then Canvore dug the ground, and the living water burst asunder the spells that bound it, and gushed forth from the earth in a great stream; and the multitudes of men and horses and cattle threw themselves upon it, and drank till they were satisfied. Cormac was then attacked with renewed valour, and his army routed with great slaughter.

I visited this well a few years ago. It lies on the road side, in the townland of Glenbrohane, near the boundary of the parish of Emlygreddan, three miles to the south of Knocklong; and it springs from a chasm, evidently artificial, dug in the side of Slieve-reagh, forming at once a very fine stream. It is still well known in the district by the name of Tobar Canvore, Canvore's well, as I found by a very careful inquiry; so that Canvore has received his reward.

That the Munster forces may have been oppressed by an unusual drought, which dried up the springs round their encampment, is nothing very improbable; and if we only suppose that the druid possessed some of the skill in discovering water with which many people in our own day are gifted, we shall not find it difficult to believe that this marvellous narrative may be in the main true; for all unusual occurrences were in those days accounted supernatural. And this view receives some confirmation from the prevalence of the tradition at the present day, as well as from the curious circumstance, that the well is still called Tober Canvore.

There is a village on the east side of the river Moy, a kind of suburb of Ballina, called Ardnarea, a name which discloses a dark tale of treachery and murder; it was originally applied to the hill immediately south of the village, which is now called Castle Hill, from a castle that has long since disappeared. The event that gave origin to this name is very fully related by Mac Fírbis in his account of the Tribes and Customs of the Hy Fiachrach, and the same story is told in the Dinnsenchus. The persons concerned are all well-known characters, and the event is far within the horizon of authentic history.

Guairē Aidhne [Ainy] was king of Connaught in the seventh century—a king whose name has passed into a proverb among the Irish for his hospitality. Though a powerful and popular monarch, he was not the true heir to the throne; the rightful heir was a man who in his youth had abandoned the world, and entered the priesthood, and who was now bishop of Kilmore-Moy; this was Cellach, or Kellagh, the son of the last monarch, Owen Bel, and fourth in descent from the celebrated Dathi. Cellach was murdered at the instigation of Guary, by four ecclesiastical students—the four Maels, as they were called, because the names of all began with the syllable Mael—who were under the bishop's tuition, and who, it appears by another account, were his own foster-brothers. The bishop's brother, however, soon after pursued and captured the murderers, and brought them in chains to the hill overlooking the Moy, which was up to that time called Tulach-na-faircsiona [Tullanafark-shina], the hill of the prospect, where he hanged them all; and from this circumstance the place took the name of Ard-na-riaghadh [Ardnarea], the hill of the executions.

They were buried at the other side of the river, a little south of the present town of Ballina, and the place was called Ard-na-Mael, the hill of the (four) Maels. The monument erected over them remains to this day; it is a cromlech, well known to the people of Ballina, and now commonly called the Table of the giants. The name Ard-na-Mael is obsolete, the origin of the cromlech is forgotten, and bishop Cellach and his murderers have long since ceased to be remembered in the traditions of the people.

When we consider how prominently the Danes figure in our history, it appears a matter of some surprise that they have left so few traces of their presence. We possess very few structures, that can be proved to be Danish; and that sure mark of conquest, the change of local names, has occurred in only a very few instances; for there are little more than a dozen places in Ireland bearing Danish names at the present day, and these are nearly all on or near the east coast.

Worsae (p. 71) gives a table of 1,373 Danish and Norwegian names in the middle and northern counties of England, ending in thorpe, by, thwaite, with, toft, beck, næs, ey, dale, force, fell, tarn, and haugh. We have only a few Danish terminations, as ford, which occurs four times; ey, three times; ster, three times; and ore, which we find in one name, not noticed at all by Worsae; and in contrast with 1,373 names in one part of England, we have only about fifteen in Ireland, almost all confined to one particular district. This appears to me to afford a complete answer to the statement which we sometimes see made, that the Danes conquered the country, and that their chiefs ruled over it as sovereigns.

The truth is, the Danes never, except in a few of the maritime towns, had any permanent settlements in Ireland, and even there their wealth was chiefly derived from trade and commerce, and they seem to have had only very seldom any territorial possessions. Their mission was rather to destroy than to build up; wherever they settled on the coast, they were chiefly occupied either in predatory inroads, or in defending their fortresses against the neighbouring Irish; they took no permanent hold on the country; and their prominence in our annals is due to their fierce and dreadful ravages, from which scarcely any part of the country was free, and the constant warfare maintained for three hundred years between them and the natives.

The only names I can find that are wholly or partly Danish are Wexford, Waterford, Carlingford, Strangford (Lough), Carnsore Point, Ireland's Eye, Lambay Island, Dalkey, Howth, Leixlip, and Ox-mantown; to these may be added the Laxweir on the Shannon, the termination ster in the names of three of the provinces, the second syllables of such names as Fingall and Donegal; probably Wicklow and Arklow, and the s prefixed to some names near the eastern coast (for which see p. 58).

The termination ford in the first four names is the well-known northern word fiord, an inlet of the sea. Waterford, Wexford, and Strangford are probably altogether Danish; the first two are called respectively by early English writers Vadrefiord and Weisford. The Danes had a settlement somewhere near the shore of Strangford lough, in the ninth and tenth centuries; and the Galls of Lough Cuan (its ancient and present Irish name) are frequently referred to in our Annals. It was these who gave it the very appropriate name of Strangford, which means strong-fiord, from the well-known tidal currents at the entrance, which render its navigation so dangerous.

The usual Irish name of Carlingford, as we find it in our Annals, is Cairlinn; so that the full name, as it now stands, signifies the fiord of Cairlinn. In O'Clery's Calendar it is called Snamh-ech, the swimming-ford of the horses; while in "Wars of GG", and several other authorities, it is called Snamh-Aighnech.

Carnsore Point, in Wexford, is known in Irish by the simple name Carn, i. e. a monumental heap. The meaning of the termination will be rendered obvious by the following passage from Worsae:—"On the extremity of the tongue of land which borders on the north the entrance of the Humber, there formerly stood a castle called Ravensöre, raven's point. Öre is, as is well-known, the old Scandinavian name for the sandy point of a promontory" (p. 65). The ore in Carnsore is evidently the same word, and the name therefore signifies the "ore" or point of the Carn.

Ptolemy calls this cape, Hieron Akron, i. e. the Sacred promontory; and Camden ("Britannia," Ed. 1594, p. 659), in stating this fact, says he has no doubt but that the native Irish name bore the same meaning. This conjecture is probably well founded, though I cannot find any name now existing near the place with this signification. Camden, however, in order to show the reasonableness of his opinion, states that Bannow, the name of a town nearly twenty miles from it, where the English made their first descent, signifies sacred in the Irish language. The Irish participle beannuighthe [bannihě] means blessed, and this is obviously the word Camden had in view; but it has no connexion in meaning with Bannow. The harbour where Robert Fitzstephen landed was called in Irish Cuan-an-bhainbh (O'Flaherty, Iar Connaught), the harbour of the bonnive or sucking pig; and the town has preserved the latter part of the name changed to Bannow.

"It is doubtful whether Wicklow derives its name from the Norwegians, though it is not improbable that it did, as in old documents it is called Wykynglo, Wygyngelo, and Wykinlo, which remind us of the Scandinavian vig, a bay, or Viking" (Worsae, p. 325). Its Irish name is Kilmantan, St. Mantan's church. This saint, according to Mac Geoghegan (Annals of Clonmacnoise), and other authorities, was one of St. Patrick's companions, who had his front teeth knocked out by a blow of a stone, from one of the barbarians who opposed the saint's landing in Wicklow: hence he was called Mantan, or the toothless, and the church which was afterwards erected there was called after him, Cill-Mantain (Four Mast.). It is worthy of remark that the word mantach [mounthagh] is still used in the south of Ireland to denote a person who has lost the front teeth.

Leixlip is wholly a Danish name, old Norse Lax-hlaup, i. e. salmon leap: this name (which is probably a translation from the Irish), it derived from the well-known cataract on the Liffey, still called the Salmon leap, a little above the village. Giraldus Cambrensis (Top. Hib. II. 41), after speaking of the fish leaping up the cataract, says:—"Hence the place derives its name of Saltus salmonis (Salmon leap)". From this word saltus, a leap, the baronies of Salt in the county Kildare have taken their name. According to Worsae, the word lax, a salmon, is very common in the local names of Scotland, and we have another example of it in the Lax-weir, i. e. Salmon weir, on the Shannon, near Killaloe.

The original name of Ireland's Eye was Inis-Ereann; it is so called in Dinnsenchus, and its meaning is, the island of Eire or Eria, who according to the same authority, was a woman. It was afterwards called Inis-mac-Nessan (Four Mast.) from the three sons of Nessan, a prince of the royal family of Leinster, namely Dicholla, Munissa, and Nadsluagh, who erected a church on it in the seventh century, the ruins of which remain to this day. They are commemorated in O'Clery's Calendar, in the following words:—"The three sons of Nesan, of Inis Faithlenn, i. e. Muinissa, Nesslerugh, and Duichoill Derg"; from which it appears that Inis Faithlenn, or, as it would be now pronounced, Innisfallen, was another ancient name for the island; this is also the name of a celebrated island in the lower lake of Killarney (Inis Fathlind, Book of L.), and in both cases it signifies the island of Fathlenn, a man's name.

The present name Ireland's Eye is an attempted translation of Inis-Ereann, for the translators understood Ereann to be the genitive case of Eire, Ireland, as it has the same form; accordingly, they made it Ireland's Ey (Ireland's island, instead of Eria's island), which in modern times has been corrupted to Ireland's Eye. Even Ussher was deceived by this, for he calls the island Oculus Hiberniæ. The name of this little island has met with the fate of the Highlander's ancestral knife, which at one time had its haft renewed, and at another time its blade: one set of people converted the name of Eire, a woman, to Ireland, but correctly translated Inis to ey; the succeeding generations accepted what the others corrupted, and corrupted the correct part; between both, not a vestige of the ancient name remains in the modern.

Eire or Eri was formerly very common in this country as a woman's name, and we occasionally find it forming a part of other local names; there are, for instance, two places in Antrim called Carnearny, in each of which a woman named Eire must have been buried, for the Four Masters write the name Carn-Ereann, Eire's monumental mound.

Lambay is merely an altered form of Lamb-ey, i. e. Lamb-island; a name which no doubt originated in the practice of sending over sheep from the mainland in the spring, and allowing them to yean on the island, and remain there, lambs and all, during the summer. Its ancient Irish name was Rechru, which is the form used by Adamnan, as well as in the oldest Irish documents; but in later authorities it is written Rechra and Reachra. In the genitive and oblique cases, it is Rechrinn, Reachrainn, &c., as for example in Leabhar Breac:—"Fothaighis Colam-cille eclais i rrachraind oirthir Bregh," "Columkill erects a church on Rachra in the east of Bregia" (O'Don. Gram. p. 155). So also in the poem on the history of the Picts printed from the Book of Ballymote by Dr. Todd (Irish Nennius, p. 127):—

"From the south (i. e. from near the mouth of the Slaney) was Ulfa sent,
After the decease of his friends;
In Rachra in Bregia (In Rachrand i mBreagaibh)
He was utterly destroyed."

Though the name Rachra, as applied to the island, is wholly lost, it is still preserved, though greatly smoothed down by the friction of long ages, in the name of Portraine, the parish adjoining it on the mainland. In a grant to Christ Church, made in the year 1308, the island is called Rechen, and the parish to which it belonged, Port-rahern, which is merely an adaptation of the old spelling Port-Rachrann, and very well represents its pronunciation; in the lapse of 500 years Port-rahern has been worn down to Portraine (Reeves). The point of land there was, in old times, a place of embarkation for the island and elsewhere, and this is the tradition of the inhabitants to the present day, who still show some remains of the old landing place; hence the name Port-Rachrann, the port or landing place of Rachra.

Other islands round the coast were called Rachra, which are now generally called Rathlin, from the genitive form Rachrann, by a change from r to l, (see pages 31 and 46). The use of the genitive for the nominative must have begun very early, for in the Welsh "Brut y Tywysogion" or Chronicle of the Chieftains, we read "Ac y distrywyd Rechrenn," "and (the Danes) destroyed Rechrenn" (Todd, Wars of GG., Introd. p. xxxii).

The best known of these is Rathlin on the Antrim coast, which Ptolemy calls Rikina, and whose name has been modified in various ways by foreign and English writers; but the natives still call it Raghery, which correctly represents the old nominative form. Ussher (Br. Ecc. Ant. c. 17) says: "our Irish antiquaries call this island Ro-chrinne," and he states further, that it was so called from the great quantity of trees with which it was formerly covered. The island, however, was never called Rochrinne, but Rachra, in which no n appears, which puts out of the question its derivation from crann a tree.

Dalkey is called in Irish, Delginis (O'Cl. Cal., Four Mast. &c.), thorn island. The Danes, who had a fortress on it in the tenth century, called it Dalk-ei, which has the same meaning as the Irish name, for the Danish word dalk signifies a thorn: the present name Dalkey is not much changed from Delginis, but the l, which is now silent, was formerly pronounced. It is curious that there has been a fortress on this island from the remotest antiquity to the present day. Our early chronicles record that Seadhgha [shā], one of the chiefs of the Milesian colony, erected the Dun of Delginis; this was succeeded by the Danish fort; and it is now occupied by a martello tower.

Oxmantown or Ostmantown, now a part of the city of Dublin, was so called because the Danes or Ostmen (i. e. eastmen) built there a town of their own, and fortified it with ditches and walls.

According to Worsae (p. 230), the termination ster in the names of three of the provinces is the Scandinavian stadr, a place, which has been added to the old Irish names. Leinster is the place (or province) of Laighen or Layn; Ulster is contracted from Ula-ster, the Irish name Uladh being pronounced Ulla; and Munster from Moon-ster, or Mounster (which is the form found in a state paper of 1515), the first syllable representing the pronunciation of the Irish Mu-mhan.

Many of the acts of our early apostles are preserved in imperishable remembrance in the names of localities where certain remarkable transactions took place, connected with their efforts to spread the Gospel. Of these I will give a few examples, but I shall defer to another chapter the consideration of those places which commemorate the names of saints.

Saul, the name of a village and parish near Downpatrick, preserves the memory of St. Patrick's first triumph in the work of conversion. Dichu, the prince of the district, who hospitably entertained the saint and his companions, was his first convert in Ireland; and the chief made him a present of his barn, to be used temporarily as a church. On the site of this barn a church was subsequently erected, and as its direction happened to be north and south, the church was also placed north and south, instead of the usual direction, east and west. On this transaction the following are Ussher's words:—"Which place, from the name of that church, is called in Scotie to this day, Sabhall Patrick, in Latin, Zabulum Patricii vel Horreum Patricii (Patrick's barn). It is still called in Irish Sabhall, which is fairly represented in pronunciation, by the modern form Saul.

It is highly probable that several churches were erected in other districts, in imitation of St. Patrick's primitive and favourite church at Saul, which were also placed north and south, and called by the same name. We know that among the churches of Armagh, one, founded probably by the saint himself, was in this direction, and called by the same name, Sabhall, though this name is now lost. And it is not unlikely that a church of this kind gave name to Saval, near Newry, to Drumsaul in the parish of Ematrix, county Monaghan, and to Sawel, a lofty mountain in the north of Tyrone. This supposition supersedes the far-fetched explanation of the last name, given in the neighbourhood, which, for several reasons, I have no hesitation in pronouncing a very modern fabrication.

Very similar in the circumstances attending its origin is the name of Elphin, in the county Roscommon. In the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick (Lib. II. c. 38), we are told that a noble Druid named Ona, lord of the ancient district of Corcaghlan in Roscommon, presented his residence, called Emlagh-Ona (Ona's marsh) to St. Patrick, as a site for a church. The church was built near a spring, over which stood a large stone, and from this the place was called Ailfinn, which Colgan interprets "the rock of the clear spring": the stone is now gone, but it remained standing in its original position until forty or fifty years ago. The townland of Emlagh, near Elphin, still preserves the name of Ona's ancient residence.

The manner in which St. Brigid's celebrated establishment was founded is stereotyped in the name of Kildare. According to a tale in the Book of Leinster, quoted by O'Curry (Lectures, p. 487), the place was called Druim-Criaidh [Drumcree] before the time of St. Brigid; and it received its present name from "a goodly faire oke" under the shadow of which the saint constructed her little cell.

The origin and meaning of the name are very clearly set forth in the following words of Animosus, the writer of the fourth Life of St. Brigid, published by Colgan:—"That cell is called in Scotie, Cill-dara, which in Latin sounds Cella-quercûs (the church of the oak). For a very high oak stood there, which Brigid loved much, and blessed it; of which the trunk still remains (i. e. up to the close of the tenth century, when Animosus wrote); and no one dares cut it with a weapon." Bishop Ultan, the writer of the third Life, gives a similar interpretation, viz. Cella roboris.

If we may judge by the number of places whose names indicate battle scenes, slaughters, murders, &c., our ancestors must have been a quarrelsome race, and must have led an unquiet existence. Names of this kind are found in every county in Ireland; and various terms are employed to commemorate the events. Moreover, in most of these places, traditions worthy of being preserved, regarding the occurrences that gave origin to the names, still linger among the peasantry.

The word cath [cah] signifies a battle, and its presence in many names points out, with all the certainty of history, the scenes of former strife. We see it in Ardcah, battle height, in Meath; in Dooncaha, in Kerry and Limerick, the fort of the battle; Derrycaw and Derryhaw, battle-wood, in Armagh; and Drumnagah, in Clare, the ridge of the battles.

One party must have been utterly defeated, where we find such names as Ballynarooa (in Limerick), the town of the defeat or rout (ruag); Greaghnaoog near Carrickmacross, and Maulnaooga, in Cork, the marshy flat and the hillock of the rout. And how vivid a picture of the hideousness of a battle field is conveyed by the following names:—Meenagorp, in Tyrone, in Irish M̃in-na-gcorp, the mountain flat of the corpses; Kilnamarve, near Carrigallen, Leitrim, the wood of the dead bodies (Coill-na-marbh); Ballinamara, in Kilkenny, the town of the dead (Baile-na-marbh), where the tradition of the battle is still remembered; Lisnafulla, near Newcastle in Limerick, the fort of the blood; Cnamhchoill [knewhill] (Book of L.) a celebrated place near the town of Tipperary, now called Cleghile, whose name signifies the wood of bones; the same Irish name is changed to Knowhill in the parish of Knocktemple, Cork.

Many of these sanguinary encounters, in which probably whole armies were almost annihilated, though lost to history, are recorded with perfect clearness in names like the following, numbers of which are found all over the country:—Glenanair, a fine valley near the boundary of Limerick and Cork, five miles south of Kilfinnane, the glen of slaughter, where the people still preserve a vivid tradition of a dreadful battle fought at a ford over the river; and with the same root word (ár, slaughter), Coumanare in Kerry, Drumar, near Ballybay in Monaghan, Glashare, a parish in Kilkenny, the hollow, the ridge, and the streamlet, of slaughter.

The murder of any near relative is termed in Irish fionghal [finnal], which is often translated fratricide; and the frequent occurrence of names containing this word, while affording undeniable evidence of the commission of the crime, demonstrates at the same time the horror with which it was regarded by the people. We have, for instance, Lisnafinelly in Monaghan, and Lisfennell in Waterford, where in both cases the victim met his doom in one of the lonely forts so common through the country; Cloonnafinneela, near Kilflyn in Kerry (cloon, a meadow); Drumnafinnela in Leitrim, and Tattanafinnell, near Clogher in Tyrone, the ridge and the field of the fratricide. And occasionally the murdered man's name is commemorated by being interwoven with the name of the spot, as may be seen in Gortmarrahafineen, near Kenmare in Kerry, which represents the Irish Gort-marbhtha-Fin-ghín, the field of Fineen's murder.

In "A Tour through Ireland, by two English Gentlemen" (Dublin, 1748), we read:—"The poorer sort of Irish Natives are mostly Roman Catholicks, who make no scruple to assemble in the open Fields. As we passed Yesterday in a By-Road, we saw a Priest under a Tree, with a large Assembly about him, celebrating Mass in his proper Habit; and though at a great Distance from us, we heard him distinctly. These Sort of People, my Lord, seem to be very solemn and sincere in their devotion" (p. 163).

The Irish practice of celebrating Mass in the open air appears to be very ancient. It was more general, however, during the period preceding the above tour than at other times, partly because there were in many places no chapels, and partly because, during the operation of the penal laws, the celebration of Mass was declared illegal. And the knowledge of this, if we be wise enough to turn it to right account, may have its use, by reminding us of the time in which our lot is cast, when the people have their chapel in every parish, and those prohibitory enactments are made mere matters of history, by wise and kind legislation.

Even in our own day we may witness the celebration of Mass in the open air; for many will remember the vast crowds that congregated on the summit of Brandon hill, in Kerry, on the 28th of June, last year, to honor the memory of saint Brendan. The spots consecrated by the celebration of the sacred mysteries are at this day well known, and greatly revered by the people; and many of them bear names formed from the word Aiffrion (Affrin), the Mass, that will identify them to all future time.

Places of this kind are found all over Ireland, and many of them have given names to townlands; and it may be further observed, that the existence of such a name in any particular locality, indicates that the custom of celebrating Mass there must have continued for a considerable time.

Sometimes the lonely side of a hill was chosen, and the people remember well, and will point out to the visitor, the very spot on which the priest stood, while the crowd of peasants worshipped below. One of these hills is in the parish of Kilmore, county Roscommon, and it has left its name on the townland of Ardanafrin, the height of the Mass; another in the parish of Donaghmore, county Donegal, called Corranafrin (cor, a round hill); a third in the parish of Kilcommon, Mayo, namely, Drumanaffrin; a fourth, in Cavan, Mullanaffrin (mullach, a summit); and still another, Knockanafrin, in Waterford, one of the highest hills of the Cummeragh range, which name is made Knocknafreeny, near Ardmore, in the same county.

Sometimes again the people selected secluded dells and mountain gorges; such as Clashanafrin, in the parish of Desertmore, county of Cork (clash a trench or fosse), and Lugganafrin in the county of Galway, the hollow of the Mass. And occasionally they took advantage of the ancient forts of their pagan ancestors, places for ages associated with fairy superstitions; and while they worshipped, they were screened and sheltered by the circumvallations of the old fortress. One of these forts stands in the parish of Kilcummin in Kerry, and still bears the name of Lissanafrin, the fort of the Mass.

Many other names of like formation are to be met with, such as Glenanafrin, Carriganaffrin, &c. Occasionally the name records the simple fact that Mass was celebrated, as we find in a place called Efferinagh, in the parish of Kiltoghert, Leitrim, a name which signifies simply "a place for Mass." And sometimes a translated name occurs of the same class, such as Mass-brook in the parish of Addergoole, Mayo, which is from the Irish Sruthan-an-Aiffrinn.

There are other words also, besides Affrin, which are used to commemorate these Masses; such as altóir, an altar, which gives name to a townland, now called Altore, in the parish of Kiltullagh, Roscommon; and to another named Oltore, in the parish of Donaghpatrick, Galway. There is also a place called "Altore cross-roads," near Inchigeelagh, Cork, and we find Carrownaltore (the quarter-land of the altar) in the parish of Aglish, Mayo.

CHAPTER II.

HISTORICAL PERSONAGES.

OUR annals generally set forth with great care the genealogy of the most remarkable men—kings, chieftains, or saints—who flourished at the different periods of our history; and even their character and their personal peculiarities are very often given with much minuteness. These annals and genealogies, which are only now beginning to be known and studied as they deserve, when examined by the internal evidence of mutual comparison, are found to exhibit a marvellous consistency; and this testimony of their general truthfulness is fully corroborated by the few glimpses we obtain of detached points in the long record, through the writings of English and foreign historians, as well as by the still severer test of verifying our frequent records of natural occurrences.

Nor are these the only testimonies. Local names often afford the most unsuspecting and satisfactory evidences of the truth of historical records, and I may refer to the preceding Chapter for instances. It is with men as with events. Many of the characters who figure conspicuously in our annals, have left their names engraven in the topography of the country, and the illustration of this by some of the most remarkable examples will form the subject of the present Chapter.

Before entering on this part of the subject, it will be necessary to make a few remarks on the origin of the names of our ancient tribes and territories, and to explain certain terms, that are often used in their formation.

"It is now universally admitted, that the ancient names of tribes in Ireland were not derived from the territories they inhabited, but from certain of their distinguished ancestors. In nine cases out of ten, names of territories and of the tribes inhabiting them are identical,"* (the former being derived from the latter). The names of tribes were formed from those of their ancestors, by prefixing certain words or postfixing others, the most important of which are the following.

Cinel [kinel], kindred, race, descendants; Cinel-Aedha [Kinelea] (O'Heeren), the race of Aedh [Ay]

* From O'Donovan's Introduction to the "Topographical Poems of O'Dugan and O'Heeren," where the reader will find a valuable essay on tribe and family names.

or Hugh, a tribe descended from Aedh (father of Failbhe Flann, king of Munster in A. D. 636), who were settled in the county Cork, and gave name to the barony of Kinalea.

Clann, children, descendants, race; in the Zeuss MSS. it is given as the equivalent of progenies. The barony of Clankee in Cavan derives its name from a tribe who are called in Irish Clann-an-Chaoich [Clan-ankee] (Four Mast.), the descendants of the one-eyed man; and they derived this cognomen from Niall Caoch O'Reilly (caoch [kee], i. e. one-eyed), who was slain in 1256. The baronies of Clanwilliam, in Limerick and Tipperary, from the clann or descendants of William Burke; Clanmaurice, a barony in Kerry, so called from the Fitzmaurices, the descendants of Maurice Fitzgerald. Besides several historic districts, this word gives name to some ordinary townlands; such as Clananeese Glebe, in Tyrone, from the race of Aengus or Aeneas; Clanhugh Demesne, in Westmeath, the descendants of Aedh or Hugh.

Corc, Corca, race, progeny. Corcomohide, the name of a parish in Limerick, is written in Irish, Corca-Muichet (Book of Lismore), the race of Muichet, who in the "Forbais Dromadamhghaire" are stated to have been descended from Muichet, one of Mogh Ruith's disciples (see p. 95, supra).

Muintir, family, people; Muntermellan and Munterneese, in Donegal, the family of Miallan and Aengus; Munterowen, in Galway, the family of Eoghan or Owen.

Siol [shiel], seed, progeny. Shillelagh, now a barony in Wicklow, was so called from the tribe of Siol-Elaigh (O'Heerin), the descendants of Elach: this district was formerly much celebrated for its oak woods, a fact that has given origin to the well-known word shillelagh, as a term for an oak stick. Shelburne, in Wexford, from the tribe of Siol-Brain (O'Heerin), the progeny of Bran; Shelmaliere, in the same county, the descendants of Maliere or Maolughra.

Tealach [tellagh], family. The barony of Tullyhaw, in Cavan, was so called from the Magaurans, its ancient proprietors, whose tribe name was Tealach-Echach (O'Dugan), i. e. the family of Eochy.

Ua signifies a grandson, and by an extension of meaning, any descendant; it is often written hua by Latin and English writers, and still oftener O, which is the common prefix in Irish family names. The nominative plural is ui [ee] (often written in Latin and English, hui or hy), which is applied to a tribe, and this word still exists in several territorial designations. Thus Offerlane, now a parish in Queen's County, was the name of a tribe, called in Irish Ui Foircheallain (Four Mast.), the descendants of Foircheallan; Imaile, a celebrated district in Wicklow, Ui Mail (O'Heerin), the descendants of Mann Mal, brother of Cahirmore, king of Ireland in the second century.

The ablative plural of ua is uibh [iv], and this form is also found occasionally in names (see p. 31, VII.). Thus Iverk, now a barony in Kilkenny, which O'Heerin writes Ui Eirc (abl. Uibh Eirc), the descendants of Erc; Iveleary in Cork (the descendants of Laeghaire), taking its name from the O'Learys, its ancient proprietors; Iveruss, now a parish in Limerick, from the tribe of Uibh Rosa.

That the foregoing is the proper signification of this word in its three cases, we have authorities that preclude all dispute; among others that of Adamnan, who, in several passages of his Life of Columba, translates ua by nepos, ui by nepotes, and uibh by nepotibus.

The word tuath [tua] meant originally populus (people), which it glosses in the Wb MS. of Zeuss; but in accordance with the custom of naming the territory after its inhabitants, it came ultimately to signify district, which is now the sense in which it is used. Near Sheephaven, in Donegal, is a well-known district called the Doe; its ancient name, as given by O'Heerin, is Tuath Bladhach; but by the Four Masters and other authorities it is usually called Tuatha, i. e. districts. It was the inheritance of the Mac Sweenys, the chief of whom was called Mac Sweeny na dTuath, or, as it is pronounced and written in English, na Doe, i. e. of the districts; and it is from this appellation that the place came to be corruptly called Doe.

With the preceding may be enumerated the word Fir or Feara, men, which is often prefixed to the names of districts to form tribe names. The old tribe called Fir-tirë (the men of the territory), in Wicklow, is now forgotten, except so far as the name is preserved in that of the river Vartry. The celebrated territory of Fermoy, in Cork, which still retains its name, is called in Irish Feara-muighe-Feine, or more shortly, Feara-muighe (O'Heerin), the men of the plain.

There are also a few words which are suffixed to men's names, to designate the tribes descended from them; such as raidhe [ree], in the word Calraidhe. There were several tribes called Calraidhe or Calry (the race of Cal), who were descended from Lewy Cal, the grand-uncle of Maccon, king of Ireland in the third century. The names of some of these are still extant: one of them was settled in the ancient Teffia, whose name is preserved by the mountain of Slievegolry, near Ardagh, county Longford, Sliabh gCalraidhe, the mountain of the (people called) Calry. There is a townland called Drumhalry (Druim-Chalraidhe, the ridge of the Calry), near Carrigallen in Leitrim; and another of the same name in the parish of Killoe, county Longford; which shows that Calry of north Teffia extended northward as far as these two townlands. Calry in Sligo and Calary in Wicklow, also preserve the names of these tribes.

The monarch Hugony the great, who reigned soon after the foundation of Emania, divided Ireland into twenty-five parts among his twenty-five children; and this division continued for about three centuries after his time. Several of these gave names to the territories allotted to them, but all those designations are now obsolete, with a single exception. To one of his sons, Lathair [Laher], he gave a territory in Ulster, which was called from him Latharna [Laharna] (Book of Rights), a name which exists to this day shortened to Larne. Though now exclusively applied to the town, it was, in the time of Colgan, the name of a district which extended northwards along the coast towards Glenarm: the town was then called Inver-an-Laharna, the river-mouth of (the territory of) Laharna, from its situation at the mouth of the Ollarbha, or Larne Water. In the Down Survey map, it is called "Inver alias Learne;" and the former name is still retained in the adjacent parish of Inver.

Many of the remarkable persons who flourished in the reign of Conor mac Nessa, king of Ulster in the first century, still live in local names. The descendants of Beann, one of Conor's sons, were called from him Beanntraighe [Bantry], (Book of Rights), i. e. the race of Beann; a part of them settled in Wexford, and another part in Cork, and the barony of Bantry in the former county, and the town of Bantry in the latter, retain their name.

When the three sons of Usnagh were murdered at the command of Conor, Fergus mac Roy, ex-king of Ulster, who had guaranteed their safety, "indignant at the violation of his safe conduct, retired into exile, accompanied by Cormac Conlingas, son of Conor, and by three thousand warriors of Uladh. They received a hospitable welcome at Cruachan from Maev [queen of Connaught] and her husband Ailill, whence they afterwards made many hostile incursions into Ulster,"* taking part in that seven years' war between Ulster and Connaught, so celebrated by our historians and romancers as the "Tain bo Cuailgne," the cattle spoil of Cooley (near Carlingford).

Fergus afterwards resided in Connaught, and Maev bore him three sons, Ciar [Keer], Conmac, and Modhruadh [Mōroo], who became the heads of three distinguished tribes. Ciar settled in Munster, and his descendants possessed the territory west of Abbeyfeale, and lying between Tralee and the Shannon; they were called Ciarraidhe [Keery] (Book of Rights), i. e. the race of Ciar, and this name was afterwards applied to the district; it was often called Ciarraidhe Luachra, from the mountain tract of Sliabh Luachra (rushy mountain, now SlieveLougher), east of Castleisland. This small territory ultimately gave the name of Ciarraidhe or Kerry to the entire county.

The descendants of Conmac were called Conmaicne [Conmacne: ne a progeny]; they were settled in Connaught, where they gave their name to several territories. One of these, viz., the district lying west of Lough Con and Lough Mask, from its situation near the sea, was called, to distinguish it from the others, Conmaicne-mara (O'Dugan: muir, the sea, gen. mara), or the sea-side Conmaicne; which name is still applied to the very same district, in the slightly contracted, and well-known form Connemara.

* From "The Irish before the Conquest," by M. C. Ferguson, where the reader will find the best published account of this war.

The posterity of the third son, Modhruadh, were called Corca-Modhruaidh, or Corcomruad (Book of L.), the race of Modhruadh; they settled in the north of the county of Clare, and their territory included the present baronies of Burren and Corcomroe, the latter of which retains the old name.

Another son of Fergus (not by Maev), was Finn or Cufinn (fair-haired hound), from whom were descended the tribe of the Dál-Confinn (dál a tribe), who afterwards took the family name of O'Finn. They inhabited a district in Connaught which was called from them Cuil-O'bhFinn [Coolovin] (Four Mast.), the corner of the O'Finns; and the same name in the modernized form of Coolavin is still applied to the territory, which now forms a barony in Sligo.

When the Connaught forces under Maev marched to invade the territories of Conor, the task of defending the different fords they had to cross, was allotted to Cuchullin, the great Ulster champion; and the various single combats with the Connaught warriors, in all of which he was victorious, are described with great minuteness in the heroic romance of "Tain bo Cuailgne." One of these encounters took place at a ford of the little river Nith (now called the Dee, in Louth), where afterwards grew up the town of Ardee; and Cuchullin's antagonist was the youthful champion Ferdia, the son of Daman, of the Firbolgic tribe Gowanree, who inhabited Erris. After a long and sanguinary combat, Ferdia was slain, and the place was ever after called Ath-Fhirdia [Ahirdee] (Leabhar na hUidhre), Ferdia's ford. The present form Ardee is a very modern contraction; by early English writers, it is generally called Atherdee, as by Boate (Chap. I., Sect. VI.), which preserves, with little change, the original Irish pronunciation.

In the reign of Felimy the Lawgiver (A. D. 111 to 119), the men of Munster seized on Ossory, and all the Leinster territories, as far as Mullaghmast. They were ultimately expelled, after a series of battles, by an Ulster chief, Lughaidh Laeighseach [Lewy Lee-shagh], son of Laeighseach Canvore, son of the renowned Conall Cearnach, chief of the Red Branch knights of Ulster in the first century (see p. 83). For this service, the king of Leinster granted Lewy a large territory in the present Queen's county; and as his descendants, the O'Mores, were called from him by the tribe name Laeighis [Leesh], their territory took the same name, which in English is commonly written Leix—a district that figures conspicuously in Irish and Anglo-Irish chronicles.

The name of this principality has altogether disappeared from modern maps, except so far as it is preserved in that of the town of Abbeyleix, i. e. the abbey of the territory of Leix, which it received from a monastery founded there in 1183 by Conor O'More.

The first battle between the Munstermen and the forces of Lewy was fought at Ath-Truisden, a ford on the river Greece, near Mullaghmast, and the former retreated to the Barrow, where at another ford there was a second battle, in which a Munster chief, Ae, the foster father of Eochy Finn Fohart, (p. 123) was slain; and from him the place was called Ath-I (Wars of G.G.), the ford of Ae, now correctly anglicised Athy.

From Fiacha Raidhe [Ree], grandson of king Felimy, descended the tribe named Corca-Raeidhe (O'Dugan), whose name is still borne by the barony of Corkaree, in Westmeath, their ancient patrimony. This territory is mentioned by Adamnan (Lib. I. cap. 47), who calls it Korkureti; and in the Book of Armagh the name is translated Regiones Roide, i. e. the territories of Raidhe or Ree.

The fanciful creations of the ancient Irish storytellers have thrown a halo of romance round the names of many of the preceding personages; nevertheless I have treated of them in the present chapter, because I believe them to be historical. As we descend from those dim regions of extreme antiquity, the view becomes clearer, and the characters that follow may, with few exceptions, be considered as standing out in full historical distinctness.

Cahirmore was monarch of Ireland from A. D. 120 to 123; he is well known in connexion with the document called "The Will of Cahirmore," which has been translated and published by O'Donovan in the Book of Rights. According to our genealogical writers (see Flaherty's Ogygia, Part III. c. 59), he had thirty sons, but only ten are mentioned in the Will, three of whom are commemorated in well-known modern names.

His eldest son was Ros-failghe [faly], i. e. Ros of the rings (fáil a ring, pl. fáilghe), whom the monarch addresses as "My fierce Ros, my vehement Failghe." His descendants were called Hy Failghe (O'Dugan), i. e. the descendants of Failghe; they possessed a large territory in Kildare and in King's and Queen's counties, to which they gave their tribe name; and it still exists in the form of Offaly, which is now applied to two baronies in Kildare, forming a portion of their ancient inheritance.

The next son mentioned in the Will is Dairë Barrach, who was the ancestor of a tribe called from him Hy Bairche (O'Dugan), the race of (Daire) Barrach. To this tribe belonged a territory in the Queen's county, including the modern barony of Slievemargy, which has its name from the Slievemargy hills. These hills have evidently been so called from the ancient tribe who possessed them; for although the Four Masters write the name Sliabh Mairgi, this is an obvious alteration from Sliabh mBairrche (the mountain of the [Hy] Bairrche), which has nearly the same pronunciation.

Another son, Ceatach, also named in the Will, was probably the progenitor of the tribe that gave name to the barony of Ikeathy, in Kildare—Hy Ceataigh, the race of Ceatach. Others of Cahirmore's sons were the ancestors of tribes, but their names have been long extinct.

The barony of Idrone, in Carlow, perpetuates the memory of the tribe of Hy Drona (Book of Rights), who formerly possessed this territory, and whose family name was O'Ryan; their ancestor, from whom they derived their tribe name, was Drona, fourth in descent from Cahirmore.

The county Fermanagh was so called from the tribe of the Fir-Monach (O'Dugan), the men of Monach, who were originally a Leinster tribe, so named from their ancestor Monach, fifth in descent from Cahirmore, by his son, Daire Barrach. They had to fly from Leinster in consequence of having killed Enna, the son of the king of that province; one part of them was located in the county Down, where the name is extinct; another part settled on the shore of Lough Erne, where they acquired a territory extending over the entire county Fermanagh.

Enna Kinsellagh, king of Leinster in the end of the fourth century, was fourth in descent from Cahirmore. He had a son named Felimy, from whom descended the sept of Hy Felimy (Four Mast.); one branch of them settled in the county Carlow, and their name is still preserved in that of the parish of Tullow-Offelimy, or Tullowphelim (which was also applied to the town of Tullow) i. e. the tulach or hill of the territory of Hy Felimy, which included this parish.

Cahirmore was slain by the celebrated Conn of the hundred battles, who ascended the throne in A. D. 123. After a reign of thirty-five years, his two brothers, Fiacha, and Eochy Finn Fothart, betrayed him into the hands of Tibraide Tireach, king of Ulster, who murdered him as he was making preparations to celebrate the Feis or convention of Tara.

Conary II., his successor (from A. D. 158 to 165), had three sons—the three Carberys—who are renowned in Irish history:—Carbery Musc, Carbery Baskin, and Carbery Riada. From Carbery Musc were descended and named all the tribes called Muscraidhe [Muskerry] (O'Heerin), i. e. the race of Musc; of which, according to O'Heerin, there were six, all in Munster. The names of all these have recently disappeared except that of one, Muscraidhe Mitaine, or Muscraidhe O'Flynn, which now forms the two baronies of Muskerry in Cork. From Carbery Baskin was named the ancient territory of Corcobaskin, in the south-west of Clare, but the name has become obsolete. Carbery Riada was the most celebrated of the three, for whom see p. 80. Carbery Musc had a son named Duibhne [Divne], whose descendants gave name to the district of Corca-Duibhne (O'Heerin), i. e. Duibhne's race; and a portion of this territory still retains the name, though somewhat corrupted, viz., the barony of Corkaguiny (dh changed to g: p. 52), in Kerry, which comprises the peninsula between Tralee and Dingle bays.

Art, the son of Conn of the hundred battles, succeeded Conary, and immediately on his accession he banished his uncle, Eochy Finn Fothart [Fōhart], from Munster. Eochy proceeded to Leinster, and the king of that province bestowed on him and his sons, certain districts, the inhabitants of which were afterwards called Fotharta [Fōharta] (Book of Rights), from their ancestor. Of these, the two principal still retain the name, viz., the baronies of Forth, in Wexford and Carlow; the former called in the annals, for distinction, Fotharta of the Carn, i. e. of Carnsore Point; and the latter, Fotharta Fea, from the plain anciently called Moy Fea, lying east of the town of Carlow.

After Art, the son of Conn, had reigned thirty years, he was slain in the year 195, in the battle of Magh Mucruimhe [Muckrivē], near Athenry, by Lewy Maccon and his followers. It is stated in the "History of the Cemeteries" in Leabhar na hUidhre, that Art believed in the Faith the day before the battle, and predicted the spread of Christianity. It would appear also that he had some presentiment of his death; for he directed that he should not be buried at Brugh on the Boyne, the pagan cemetery of his forefathers, but at a place then called Dumha Dergluachra (the burial mound of the red rushy-place), "where Treoit is at this day" (Trevet in the county Meath). "When his body was afterwards carried eastwards to Dumha Dergluachra, if all the men of Erin were drawing it thence, they could not, so that he was interred at that place, because there was a Catholic church to be afterwards at the place where he was interred, for the truth and the Faith had been revealed to him through his regal righteousness," (Hist. of Cemeteries; see Petrie's R. Towers, p. 100).

In the historical tale called "The Battle of Magh Mucruimhe" it is stated that, when Art was buried, three sods were dug in honour of the Trinity; and that hence the place, from that time forward, got the name of Tre-foit (O'Clery's Cal., &c.), i. e. three fóds or sods, which is very little changed in the present name Trevet.

The celebrated Mogh Nuadhat [Mō Nuat], or Owen More, was king of Munster during the reign of Conn of the hundred battles; he contended with that monarch for the sovereignty of all Ireland, and after defeating him in ten battles, he obliged him to divide the country equally between them—the well-known ridge of sand-hills called Esker Riada, extending from Dublin to Galway, being adopted as the boundary. From Owen descended a long line of kings, and he was the ancestor of the most distinguished of the great Munster families.

He spent nine years in Spain, and the king of that country gave him his daughter Beara in marriage; on his return to Ireland, accompanied by Spanish auxiliaries, to make war against Conn, he landed on the north side of Bantry bay, and he called the harbour Beara in honour of his wife. It is now called Bearhaven; the island that shelters it is called Great Bear island; and the barony is also known by the name of Bear.

Owen derived his alias name of Mogh Nuadhat

(which signifies Nuadhat's slave) from his foster father Nuadhat, king of Leinster. From this king, according to O'Donovan (Cambr. Evers., note, p. 473, Vol. I.), Maynooth derives its name:—Magh-Nuadhat, i. e. Nuat's plain.

Olioll Olum, the son of Owen, succeeded him as king of Munster, and was almost as renowned as his father; he is usually taken as the starting point in tracing the genealogies of the Munster families. Three of his sons—Owen, Cormac Cas, and Cian [Kean]—became very much celebrated.

In the year 226 was fought the battle of Crinna in Meath, between Cormac mac Art, king of Ireland, and the Ulstermen, under Fergus, son of Imchadh; Cormac defeated the Ulster forces, by the assistance of Tadg [Teige], son of Cian; and for this service the king bestowed on him a large territory, extending from the Liffey northwards to Drumiskin in Louth. Tadg's descendants were called Cianachta [Keenaghta] (O'Dugan), i. e. the race of Cian, from his father; and the territory was afterwards known by this name. It is forgotten in Leinster, but in Ulster it is still the name of a barony in the north-west of Londonderry, called Keenaght, from the O'Conors of Glengiven, who formerly ruled over it, and who were a branch of the tribe of Keenaghta. The name is also preserved in Coolkeenaght, in the parish of Faughanvale, Derry; Cuaille-Cianachta (Four Mast.), the bare tree of Keenaght.

The barony of Ferrard, in Louth, indirectly keeps up the memory of this ancient tribe. The range of heights called Slieve Breagh, running from near Col-lon, in Louth, eastwards to Clogher head, was anciently called Ard-Cianachta (Four Mast.; Ard-Cean-nachte, Adamnan), the height of the territory of Keenaght, and the inhabitants were called Feara-Arda-Cianachta, or more shortly Feara-Arda (Four Mast.), i. e. the men of the height, from which the modern name Ferrard has been formed.

Tadg, the son of Cian, had a son named Cormac Gaileng, who, having fallen under the displeasure of his father, fled from Munster to Connaught, where he obtained from Cormac mac Art, king of Ireland, a district which had previously been inhabited by the Firbolgs or "Attacots." The descendants of Cormac Gaileng and of his son Luigh, or Lewy, were known by the two names Gailenga (O'Dugan), or the race of Gaileng, and Luighne [Leyny] (O'Dugan), the posterity (ne) of Luigh. These were originally only various names for the same tribe, but they are at the present day applied to different districts—one in the modern form of Gallen, to a barony in Mayo, and the other to a barony in Sligo, now called Leyny.

A branch of the same tribe settled in Leinster, where there were two territories, called respectively Mor-Gailenga and Gailenga-beag (O'Dugan), or the great and little Gailenga; the latter is obsolete, but the former is still retained in the name of the modern barony of Morgallion in Meath.

Eile, the seventh in descent from Cian, was the ancestor of the tribes called Eile or Ely, who gave name to several districts, all in the ancient Mumha or Munster, and of which O'Carroll was king. The only one of these whose name has held its ground is Ely O'Fogarty, so called from its ancient possessors, the O'Fogartys; and the name is now applied to a barony in Tipperary, in the shortened form of Elio-garty.

Eochy Liathanach [Lehanagh] was fifth in descent from Olioll Olum, and from him the tribe of O'Liathain, who now call themselves O'Lehane or Lyons, are derived. Castlelyons, in Cork, was situated in their territory, and still retains its name—Caislen-ui-Liathain, the castle of the territory of Hy Liathan.

Settled in different parts of Connaught and Leinster were formerly seven tribes—three in the former province, and four in the latter—all with the same tribe name of Dealbhna [Dal'vāna]; they were an offshoot of the Dalcassians of north Munster, and were descended from Lewy Dealbhaeth [Dalway], who was the son of Cas mac Tail (seventh in descent from Olioll Olum), the ancestor of the Dalcassians. They derived their tribe name from Lewy Dealbhaeth:—Dealbhna, i. e. the descendants of Dealbhaeth. None of these tribes have left their name in our present territorial nomenclature except one, namely, Dealbhna mor, or the great Dealbhna, which is now the barony of Delvin, in Westmeath.

From Conall, the ninth from Olioll Olum, descended the tribe of Hy Conaill Gabra (Book of L.), who possessed a territory in the county Limerick, a part of which still retains the name, viz., the baronies of Upper and Lower Connello.

I have already mentioned (p. 83) the destruction of the palace of Emania, in the year 332, by the three Collas; these were Colla Uais, Colla Meann, and Colla da Chrioch, who were the ancestors of many noble families in Ulster and Scotland, and the first of whom reigned as king of Ireland from A. D. 323 to 326. He was the progenitor of the several tribes known by the name of Ui mic Uais [Ee-mic-oosh], one of which was seated somewhere in the north of Ireland, another in east Meath, near Tara, and a third in Westmeath. This last is the only one of the three whose name has survived; whose territory is now a barony, and known by the name of Moygoish, which is an attempt at pronouncing the original Ui mic Uais.

Caerthann [Keeran], the great grandson of Colla Uais, was the ancestor, through his son Forgo, of the tribe called Hy Mic Caerthainn (Four Mast.); the territory they inhabited, which was situated in the west of the present county of Derry, was called from them Tir-mic-Caerthainn (the land of Keeran's son), or more shortly, Tir-Chaerthainn, which is still the name of a barony now called Tirkeeran.

The barony of Cremorne, in Monaghan, preserves the name of the ancient district of Crioch-Mughdhorn [Cree-Mourne], i. e. the country (crioch) of the people called Mughdhorna, who were descended and named from Mughdhorn [Mourne], the son of Colla Meann. About the middle of the 12th century, a tribe of the Mac Mahons emigrated from Cremorne, and settled in the south of the present county of Down, to which they gave their tribe name of Mughdhorna, and which is now known as the barony of Mourne.

The Mourne mountains owe their name to the same event, having been previously called Beanna-Boirche [Banna-borka]. The shepherd Boirche, according to the Dinnsenchus, herded on these mountains the cattle of Ross (son of Imchadh), king of Ulster, in the third century, and the account states that his favourite look-out point was the summit of Slieve Slanga, now Slieve Donard, the highest peak in the range; hence these mountains received the very appropriate name of Beanna-Boirche, Boirche's peaks.

Niallan, descended in the fourth degree from Colla Da Chrioch [Cree], was the progenitor of the tribe called Hy Niallain (i. e. Niallan's race); and their ancient patrimony forms the two baronies of Oneilland, in Armagh, which retain the name.

The descendants of Eochy Moyvane, king of Ireland from A. D. 358 to 365, branched into a vast number of illustrious families, the earlier members of which have left their names impressed on many localities. The following short genealogical table exhibits a few of his immediate descendants, viz. those concerned in the present inquiry, and it will render what I have to say regarding them more easily understood.

Fiachra [Feecra], son of Eochy Moyvane, was the ancestor of the Hy Fiachrach, which branched into a great number of families. Amhalgaidh [Awly], his son, brother of the monarch Dathi [Dawhy], was king of Connaught, and gave name to Tir-Amhalgaidh, i. e. Awly's district, now the barony of Tirawly, in Mayo.

Fiachra Ealgach, son of Dathi, gave his name to Tir-Fhiachrach (Four Masters), Fiachra's district; and the sound is very well preserved in the modern name Tireragh, which is applied to a barony in Sligo. The barony of Tirerrill in the same county was possessed by the descendants of Olioll, son of Eochy Moyvane, and from him it got the name of Tir-Oliolla (Hy Fiachrach), which, by a change of l to r, has been corrupted to the present name.

The great monarch Niall of the Nine Hostages, king of Ireland from A. D. 379 to 405, had fourteen sons, eight of whom had issue, and became the ancestors of many great and illustrious families: of these eight, four remained in Meath, viz. Laeghaire [Leary], Conall Criffan, Fiacha, and Maine; and four settled in Ulster—Eoghan or Owen, Conall Gulban, Carbery, and Enna Finn. The posterity of Niall are usually called Hy Neill, the southern Hy Neill being descended from the first four, and the northern Hy Neill from the others.

Laeghaire was king of Ireland from A. D. 428 to 458, and his reign was rendered illustrious by the arrival of St. Patrick; he erected one of the forts at Tara, which still exists, and retains the name Rath-Laeghaire; and the old name of Kingstown—Dunleary) Laeghaire's dun)—was, in the opinion of some, derived from him.

Owen and Conall Gulban are renowned in Irish history, as the heads of two great branches of the northern Hy Neill, the Kinel Owen, and Kinel Connell. Owen, who died in A. D. 465, was the ancestor of the O'Neills, and his descendants possessed the territory extending over the counties of Tyrone and Londonderry, and the two baronies of Raphoe and Inishowen in Donegal; all this district was anciently called Tir-Eoghain (Wars of GG), Owen's territory, which is now written Tyrone, and restricted to one county. The peninsula between Lough Foyle and Lough Swilly received also its name from him, Inishowen, i. e. Owen's island.

Conall, who received the cognomen Gulban from having been fostered near the mountain Binn-Gulbain (Gulban's peak; now Binbulbin), in Sligo, died in 464; he was the ancestor of the O'Donnells, and his posterity ultimately possessed the county of Donegal, which from him was called Tirconnell, Conall's district.

One of the sons of Conall Gulban was Enna Boghaine [Boana], and he became the ancestor of a tribe called Kinel Boghaine; the district they inhabited was called Tir-Boghaine (Four Mast.), and frequently Baghaineach [Bawnagh], i. e. Boghaine's territory; and this latter still holds its place in the form of Banagh, which is the name of a modern barony, a portion of the ancient district.

Baeighill [Boyle], who was tenth in descent from Conall Gulban, was the ancestor of the O'Boyles, and the district they possessed was called from them Baeighellach (Four Mast.), or Boylagh, which is still the name of a barony in the south-west of Donegal.

Flaherty, also descended from Conall Gulban, was king of Ireland from A. D. 723 to 729, and fifth in descent from him was Cannanan, from whom the O'Cannanans (who now call themselves Cannon) are derived. From this family Letterkenny in Donegal received its name, which is a shortened form of Letter-Cannanan, the O'Cannanan's hill-slope.

Carbery, another of Niall's sons, was the ancestor of the Kinel-Carbery; a part of them settled in the north of the present county of Longford, where the mountain Slieve-Carbury retains their name; and another portion took possession of a territory in the north of Sligo, which is now known as the barony of Carbury.

CHAPTER III.

EARLY IRISH SAINTS.

OUR early ecclesiastical writers have left us ample records of the most remarkable of those illustrious men and women, who in the fifth and succeeding centuries devoted their lives to the conversion of the Irish nation. There are great numbers again, of whom we possess only meagre details, sometimes obscure and conflicting, and often very perplexing to the student of those early times. And many passed silently to their reward, leaving their names and nothing more, to attest their participation in the good work.

Most of these saints settled in particular districts, and founded churches, monasteries, or schools, which continued for ages to be centres of civilization, and of knowledge both secular and religious. Whoever understands the deep religious feeling of our people, and the fidelity with which they cling to the traditions of their ancestors, will not be surprised that in most cases they retain to this day in the several localities, a vivid recollection of the patron saints, and cherish their memory with feelings of affection and veneration.

Most of these churches retain the names of their founders, suffixed to such words as Kill, and Temple, (a church), Tee, Ti, or Ty (a house), &c. Names of this kind abound in every part of the country, and in all Ireland there are probably not less than ten thousand, that commemorate the names of the founders, or of the saints to whom the churches were dedicated, or that in some other way indicate ecclesiastical origin.

To attempt an enumeration of even the principal saints that adorned our country from the fifth to the eighth or ninth century, and who are commemorated in local names, would far exceed the limits of a chapter; but I shall here select a few for illustration, passing over, however, some of the great saints, such as Patrick, Brigid, and Columba, whose lives, and the religious establishments that retain their names, are generally speaking sufficiently well-known.

Soon after St. Patrick's arrival in Ulster, and while he was in the neighbourhood of Downpatrick, he met and converted a young man named Mochaei [Mohee], whose mother was Bronach, daughter of the pagan chief Milcho, with whom the saint had spent seven years of his youth in captivity. After having baptized him, he tonsured and dedicated him to the Church; and according to O'Clery's Calendar, he was the first of the Irish saints to whom St. Patrick presented a crozier and a book of the Gospels.

This Mochaei, who was also called Caelan (i. e. a slender person), became afterwards very much distinguished, and ultimately attained the rank of bishop: he died in the year 497. He built a church and established a school at a place called Naendruim, or Nendrum, in Strangford Lough, which was long a puzzle to topographers, and was generally confounded with Antrim, till Dr. Reeves, in his "Description of Nendrum," identified the place, and corrected the long-established error. It forms the eastern portion of Ballynakill parish, and in memory of the saint, it was also called Inis Mochaei or Mahee Island, which last name it retains to this day. Even yet this place retains the relics of its former distinction, namely, the remains of a round tower, and of a triple cashel or wall surrounding the foundations of the old church.

Another of St. Patrick's disciples was St. Domhanghart [Donart], bishop, son of Eochy, king of Ulidia. He founded two churches—one at a place called Rath-murbhuilg, near the foot of Slieve Donard, and the other “on the very summit of the mountain itself, far from all human habitation” (Colgan, A. SS., p. 743). The ruins of this little church existed down to a recent period on Slieve Donard; and the name of the mountain stands as a perpetual memorial of the saint, who is still held in extraordinary veneration among the Mourne mountains, and of whom the peasantry tell many curious legends.

The ancient name of this mountain was Slieve Slaingē, so called from the bardic hero Slainge, the son of Parthalon, who was buried on its summit; and the great cairn raised over him still exists, and forms a very conspicuous object. Giraldus Cambrensis, writing in the twelfth century, records the two names of the mountain, but St. Domhanghart's name he latinizes Dominicus:—“A very high mountain which hangs over the sea flowing between Britain and Ireland, is called Salanga, from the second [son of Bartholanus, namely, Salanus, i. e. Slainge]; but because St. Dominicus many ages afterwards built a noble monastery at its base, it is now more usually called the mountain of St. Dominicus” [i. e. Slieve Donard] (Top. Hib., Dist. III. Cap. II.).

The “noble monastery” of Cambrensis is the church mentioned by Colgan (A. SS., p. 743) as “formerly called Rath-murbhuilg, now called Machaire-ratha,” and which he states is at the foot of the mountain. This identifies it with Maghera, now the name of a village and parish, north of the mountain; Machaire-ratha (the plain of the fort) being pronounced Maghera-rāha, which was shortened to Magherá. The old name Rath-murbhuilg (which signifies the rath of the sea-inlet), was of course originally applied to a fort, but it was afterwards transferred to the church, and thence to the parish. The change of name was effected by first dropping murbhuilg, and afterwards prefixing machaire; and the intermediate stage appears in the Taxation of 1306, in which the church is called simply Rath.

The murbholg from which it took its original name, is the small inlet near it, entering from Dundrum Bay; and it is a curious confirmation of the authenticity of the foregoing history of the name, that on its shore there are still two townlands (originally one) called Murlough, which is the anglicised form of Murbholg.

There is a village in Derry called Maghera, which is also contracted from Machaire-ratha. It was anciently called Rath-Luraigh (Four Mast.), i. e. the fort of St. Lurach, or, as he is now called, Lowry, the patron saint, whom O'Clery's Calendar, at the 17th of February, designates as "Lurach of the poems, son of Cuana, of the race of Colla Uais, monarch of Ireland:" he is well remembered in the place, and his church, grave, and holy well are still to be seen. From this church, the level land where the town stands took the name of Machaire-Ratha-Luraigh (the plain of Rathlowry), contracted to Machaire-ratha, and modernized to Maghera.

The patron of Kinawly in Fermanagh is St. Natalis, or, as he is called in Irish, Nailé [Nawly], and from him the place is called Cill-Nailé (O'Cl. Cal.), which ought to have been anglicised Kilnawly. In O'Clery's Calendar, the following notice of him occurs at the 27th of January:—"Naile of Inbher-Naile in Tir-Baghuine in Cinel-Conaill (the barony of Banagh, in Donegal); and afterwards abbot of Cill-Naile, and Daimhinis in Feara-Manach" (Devenish, in Fermanagh). Inbher-Naile (Naile's river mouth), is the present village of Inver, west of Donegal, of which he is also the patron, and where he is still remembered; and his name is preserved in that of Legnawly Glebe (Naile's hollow), near the village.

Another Natalis or Naile is the patron saint of Kilmanagh, west of Kilkenny (Cill-Manach, Mart. Taml., the church of the monks); and it may be assumed that the church of Killenaule, in Tipperary, (which is not far from Kilmanagh), was dedicated to, and named from, him.

Some, and among others Colgan, are of opinion that the two Nailēs are identical, but this is disputed by Dr. Lanigan. The O'Clerys make them different, and state that Naile of Kinawly was the son of Aengus, that king of Munster, of whom is told the celebrated anecdote, that when he was baptized by St. Patrick in Cashel, his foot was accidentally pierced by the crozier, and so deep was his fervour that he bore it without a word, thinking it was a part of the ceremony. Whoever tries to disentangle this question by referring to the Calendars, will find it involved in much confusion: but it seems certain that they were two different persons; that Naile of Kilmanagh was really the son of Aengus; and that the other Naile flourished somewhat later, for it is stated that he died in 564.

Ardbraccan (Breca's height), in Meath, was founded by St. Breca, about whose history, although he was a very remarkable man, there hangs considerable obscurity. The most probable accounts represent him as the son of Eochy Ballderg, prince of Thomond, who was baptized by St. Patrick at Singland, near Limerick. Brecan, after having erected a church at Ardbraccan, removed to the Great island of Aran, where he fixed his principal establishment; and here are still to be seen the ruins of his church, and his tombstone, inscribed with his name, in very ancient Roman characters (see Petrie's R. Towers, p. 138).

St. Itē, or Idē, virgin, who is often called the Brigid of Munster, was one of the most illustrious saints in an age abounding in illustrious men and women. She was born about the year 480, of the noble race of the Desii in Waterford, being descended from Fiacha, the son of Felim the Lawgiver. She was from her earliest years filled with the spirit of piety, and when she came of age, obtained her parents' consent to devote herself to a religious life. After having received the veil, she proceeded to the territory of Hy Conaill, in Limerick, where she selected a spot called Cluain Credhuil [Clooncraill] for her residence. She was soon visited by great numbers of pious maidens, who placed themselves under her direction; and in this manner sprang up her nunnery, which was the first in that part of the country, and which afterwards attained to great celebrity. The name of the place was changed to Cill-Ide (O'Cler. Cal.), or as it is now called, Killeedy, which gives name to a parish; and at the present day the place contains the ruins of a very ancient, and exquisitely beautiful little church.

This virgin saint is remembered with intense veneration all over Munster, and especially in Limerick. Her name is sometimes changed to Midē (by prefixing *Mo), and in this form we find it in the names of

* The syllables mo (my) and do or da (thy), were often prefixed to the names of Irish saints as terms of endearment or reverence; thus Conna became Mochonna, and Dachonna. The churches dedicated to her, of which there are several, and which are now called Kilmeedy; one of them giving name to a village in Limerick.

St. Brendan of Clonfert, or, as he is often called, Brendan the navigator, was the son of Finlogh of the race of Ciar (see p. 117); and was born in Kerry in the year 484. He received the rudiments of his education under a bishop Erc, and was an intimate friend of St. Ite of Killeedy. After having studied with St. Iarlath at Tuam, and with St. Finnian at Clonard, he visited Brittany, where he founded a monastery. It was previous to this last visit that he undertook his famous voyage, in which he is said to have spent seven years sailing about on the western sea, and to have landed on various strange shores.

He founded the monastery of Clonfert, in Galway, about the year 553, where he drew together a vast number of monks; it soon became one of the most celebrated religious establishments in Ireland; and in memory of the founder the place is generally called in the Annals Clonfert-Brendain. He also founded the monastery of Ardfert, in his native county (which is also called Ardfert-Brendain), where a beautiful ancient church still remains. There are several places in Ireland called Clonfert, which name is written in the Book of Leinster Cluain-ferta, the meadow of the grave; and Ardfert is written by the Four Masters Ard-ferta, the height of the grave.

There are two remarkable mountains in Ireland diminutives án, ín, and óg, were also often postfixed; as we find in Ernan, Ernog, Baeithin, Baethan, &c. Sometimes the names were greatly changed by these additions: thus Aedh is the same name as Maedhog (Mo-Aedh-óg, my little Aedh), though when pronounced they are quite unlike, Aedh being pronounced Ai, and Maedhog, Mogue: Ai = Mogue!

called Brandon Hill from this saint. One is near Inistioge, in Kilkenny; and the other is the well-known mountain—one of the highest in Ireland—west of Tralee, in Kerry, on the summit of which are the ruins of his oratory, with an ancient stone-paved causeway leading to it, which are, probably, coeval with St. Brendan himself.

There were many saints named Ciaran or Kieran, but two of them were distinguished beyond the others; St. Ciaran of Clonmacnoise, of whom I shall not speak here, and St. Ciaran of Ossory. Regarding the exact period when the latter flourished, there is much uncertainty; but according to the most reliable accounts, he became a bishop about the year 538. He was born in the island of Cape Clear; but his father, Lugneus, was a native of Ossory, and of kingly descent.

Ciaran was one of the numerous band of saints who attended St. Finnian's school at Clonard; and having retired to a solitary place called Saighir [Sair], in the territory of Eilĕ, in Munster, he after some time erected a monastery there, which gradually grew and became the nucleus of a town. He subsequently employed himself partly in the care of his monastery, and partly in preaching the Gospel to the Ossorians and others, of whom he converted great numbers.

According to a gloss in the Felire of Aengus at the 5th of March (Ciaran's festival day), Saighir was the name of a fountain; after the saint's time it was called Saighir-Ciarain, which is now contracted to Seirkieran, the name of a parish near Parsonstown. Ciaran is also the patron of Rathkieran, in Kilkenny, where he probably built his church near a pagan rath, which took his name.

On the island of Cape Clear, traditions of St. Ciaran still flit among the peasantry. An ancient little church retains the name of Kilkieran; and a strand in one part of the island is called Trakieran (Ciaran's strand), on which stands a primitive stone cross, said to have been made by the saint's own hands.

St. Ciaran established a nunnery near Seirkieran for his mother Liadhan [Leean], or Liedania; and from her the place has since borne the name of Killyon (Liadhan's church). It is highly probable that it is from her also that the parish of Killyon, in Meath, and the townland of Killyon in the parish of Dunfierth, Kildare, received their names.

There were several saints called Baeithin [Bweeheen], of whom the most distinguished was Baeithin of Iona, so called because he was a companion, relative, and disciple of St. Columba, and governed the monastery for four years after that saint's death: he died the 9th of June, 600. This saint, whom Columba very much loved, is often mentioned by Adamnan; and in O'Clery's Calendar he is spoken of in these words:—"Baeithin, abbot of Icolmkill after Columkill himself; and Tech-Baeithin (Baeithin's house), in Cinel-Conaill (Donegal), was his chief church, for he was of the race of Conall Gulban, son of Niall of the Nine Hostages." His memory is still revered at this church, which is now called Taughboyne, and gives name to a parish in Donegal.

There is another Tech-Baeithin in Roscommon, which also gives name to a parish, now called Tibohine, the patron saint of which is a different Baeithin. He is mentioned in O'Clery's Calendar at the 19th of February (his festival day):—"Baoithin, bishop (son of Cuana), of Tech-Baoithin in Airteach, or in the west of Midhe (Meath). He was of the race of Enda, son of Niall" [of the Nine Hostages]. He was one of the ecclesiastics to whom the apostolic letter was written, in the year 640, on the subject of the time for celebrating Easter (see Bede, Hist. Eccl., Lib. II., Cap. XIX).

The church "in the west of Midhe," mentioned above, is Taghboyne, in the parish of Churchtown, Westmeath, where he is also patron. He built another church near an ancient rath, not far from Kells, in Meath, and the rath remains while the church has disappeared; hence it was called Rath-Baeithin, and in recent times Balrathboyne, the town of Baeithin's rath, which is now the name of a parish.

Another Baeithin, son of Finnach, of the race of Laeighsech Ceannmhor (see p. 119), built a church at Ennisboyne (Baeithin's island or river holm), in the parish of Dunganstown, Wicklow, where there is still an interesting church ruin. He is supposed to have flourished about the beginning of the seventh century. Crossboyne in Mayo is called in "Hy Fiachrach," Cros-Baeithin, i. e. St. Baeithin's cross; but who this Baeithin was I have not been able to ascertain.

St. Ninny, the patron of Inishmacsaint, in Fermanagh, is commemorated in O'Clery's Calendar at the 17th of January, in the following words:—"Ninnidh, bishop of Inis-muighe-samh, in Loch-Erne; and he was Ninnidh Saebhruisc (saebhruisc, i. e. torvi oculi), who was of the race of Enda, son of Niall" [of the Nine Hostages]; and at the 16th of January he is mentioned in the Mart. Taml. as "Ninnid Lethderc" (i. e. one-eyed). He was a disciple of St. Finnian of Clonard, and was a contemporary of St. Columba.

Knockninny, a hill in the south of Fermanagh, which gives name to a barony, is called Cnoc-Ninnidh (Ninny's hill) by the Four Masters; and though we have no written record of St. Ninny's connexion with it, the uniform tradition of the place is, that the hill derived its name from him.

St. Molaga, or, as he is sometimes called, Lochein, was born in the territory of Fermoy, in Cork, where he also received his education; and after distinguishing himself by piety and learning, he established a monastery at a place called Tulach-mín (smooth little hill), in the same district.

He visited Connor, in Ulster, and thence proceeded to North Britain and Wales. On his return he settled for some time in Fingal, north of Dublin, where he kept a swarm of bees, a portion of the bees brought over from Wales by St. Modomnoc of Tibberaghny, in Kilkenny. From this circumstance the place was called Lann-beachaire [backera] (O'Cl. Cal.), the church of the bee-man.* This is the ruined church and cemetery in Bremore, a little north of Balbriggan, now nameless, but which in the Reg. Alani of the See of Dublin, is called Lambeeher. He returned to Tulach-mín, and died there on the 20th of January, some short time after the year 664.

He is the patron saint of Templemolaga, near Mitchelstown, in Cork, and here, on the bank of the Funcheon, in a sequestered spot, is situated his church—Templemolaga, from which the parish takes its name—a venerable ivy-clad little ruin; near which is his well, Tobar-Molaga. About four miles north-

* Giraldus, among others, relates this circumstance of the importation of bees by St. Modomnoc, or Domnoc, or, as he calls him, Dominicus:—"St. Dominicus of Ossory, as some say, introduced bees into Ireland, long after the times of Solinus" (Top. Hib., Dist. I., c. v.). Some records say that these were the first bees brought to Ireland, but Lanigan (Vol. ii., p. 321) shows that there were bees in the country before St. Domnoc's time. It is evident that he merely imported hive or domesticated bees.

east of Templemolaga is the ruined church of Labbamolaga, Molaga's bed or grave, which gives name to a townland. The place called Tulach-mín was obviously identical with, or in the immediate neighbourhood of Templemolaga, but the name is now obsolete.

St. Mocheallog [Mohallog] or Dacheallog flourished in the beginning of the seventh century. According to Lanigan, he spent some time under the instruction of St. Declan of Ardmore, and died between the years 639 and 656. He founded a church at Kilmallock in Limerick, which the same author says, is supposed to be a contraction of Cill-Mocheallog; but there can be no doubt at all that it is so, and for two sufficient reasons:—first, because in the Felire of Aengus it is stated, at the 26th of March, St. Mocheallog's festival day, that Cill-Dacheallog is in the territory of Hy Carbery in Munster, which identifies it with Kilmallock, as Hy Carbery included the barony of Coshma; and, secondly, the inhabitants at this day, when speaking Irish, always call the town Cill-Mocheallog.

Finan was the name of many saints, of whom Finan surnamed Lobhar, or the leper, because for thirty years he was afflicted with some kind of leprosy, was the most remarkable. He was a native of Ely O'Carroll, then forming part of Munster, and governed for some time as abbot, the monasteries of Swords near Dublin, and Clonmore-Mogue in Leinster. He is mentioned in O'Clery's Calendar at the 16th of March, in the following words:—"Finan the leper of Sord, and of Cluain-mór in Leinster; and of Ard-Fionain in Munster; he was of the race of Cian, son of Olioll Olum." He died between the years 675 and 695.

He founded a monastery in the island of Innisfallen

(see p. 101), in the lower Lake of Killarney ; and that of Ardfinan, in Tipperary (mentioned above), which preserves his name. Kilfinnane, in Limerick, doubtless owes its foundation to this Finan also, being called in Irish Cill-Fhionain, i. e. Finan's church ; his well still exists, and his festival was formerly celebrated there, but all memory of the exact day is lost.

Another Finan, who was surnamed Cam, i. e. crooked, because, as the Mart. Taml. has it, "there was an obliquity in his eyes," flourished in the sixth century. He was a native of Corkaguiny, in Kerry, and was descended from Carbery Musc. He is the patron of Kinnitty, in King's County—Ceann-Eitigh, Etech's head—so called, according to a gloss in the Felire of Aengus at the 7th of April, the saint's festival day, because the head of Etech, an ancient Irish princess, was buried there. Derrynane, the well-known seat of the O'Connell family, took its name from him—Doire-Fhionáin, Finan's oak grove ; and his house, one of the beehive-shaped structures, is still to be seen on Church Island, in Currane Lough, four miles north of Derrynane. His name is also preserved in Rahinnane, Finan's fort, now a townland near Ventry.

One of the brightest ornaments of the Irish Church in the seventh and eighth centuries was the illustrious Adamnan, abbot of Iona, and the writer of the well-known Life of St. Columba ; whom the Venerable Bede designates as "a wise and good man, and most eminently learned in the science of the Holy Scriptures." (Hist. Eccl., Lib. V., Cap. xv.). We have no direct record of the exact place or time of his birth, but there is good reason to believe that he was a native of Donegal, and that he was born about the year 627. He was elected abbot of Iona in the year

679. In 685 he was sent to Alfrid, king of the Northumbrian Saxons, to solicit a restoration of some captives that had been carried off, the previous year, from the territory of Meath, by Saxon pirates; and in this mission he was eminently successful. About the year 703 he visited Ireland for the last time, and succeeded in inducing most of the northern Irish to adopt the Roman method of computing the time for Easter. He returned to Iona in 704, in which year he died, in the 77th year of his age.

The name Adamnan, is according to Cormac's Glossary, an Irish diminutive of Adam. It is generally pronounced in three syllables, but its proper Irish pronunciation is Awnaun, the d and m being both aspirated (Adhamhnan). The saint's name is commemorated in several places in Ireland, and always, as might be expected, in this phonetic form.

He is the patron of Raphoe, where he is called Eunan, but no place there retains the name. He is also patron of Ballindrait in the parish of Clonleigh, Donegal, the Irish name of which is Droichet-Adhamhnain, St. Adamnan's bridge. The modern designation has not preserved the name of the saint; Ballindrait is contracted from the Irish Baile-an-droichit, the town of the bridge.

Errigal in Londonderry has Adamnan also for its patron, and hence it was called in Irish Airecal-Adhamhnain, Adamnan's habitation. The old church was situated in the townland of Ballintemple (the town of the church); south of which is the only local commemoration of the saint's name, viz., a large stone called "Onan's rock."

In the Life of St. Farannan published by Colgan, we are informed that Tibraide, lord of Hy Fiachrach, bestowed on St. Columba a place called Cnoc-na-maoile; but that it was subsequently called Scrin-Adhamhnain from a shrine of that saint afterwards erected there. From this shrine the parish of Skreen derived its name. He is there called Awnaun, and his well, Toberawnaun (which gives name to a townland), lies a little south of the old church.

There is a townland called Syonan in the parish of Ardnurcher, in Westmeath, which, according to the Annals of Clonmacnoise, received its name from him. The tradition of the place is, that Adamnan in one of his visits to Ireland preached to the multitude on the hill there, which has ever since been called Suidhe-Adhamhnain [Syonan], Adamnan's seat. Killonan in the parish of Derrygalvin, in Limerick, may also have been called so from him, but of this we have no evidence.*

The Martyrology of Tallaght, at the 3rd of March, mentions St. Moshacra, the son of Senan of Teach Sacra; and in O'Clery's Calendar we find, "Mosha-cra, abbot of Clonenagh, and of Teach Sacra, in the vicinity of Tallaght."

This Mosacra or Sacra was one of the fathers who composed the synod held at Armagh about the year 696, at which Adamnan attended from Iona. He was the founder and abbot of the monastery at Teach-Sacra (Sacra's house), a name afterwards changed to Tassagard, and subsequently contracted to Saggart, which is now the name of a village and parish near Tallaght, in Dublin.

One of the most remarkable among the early saints of Ireland was St. Moling, bishop of Ferns. He was descended from Cahirmore, monarch of Ireland in the second century; his mother was Nemhnat, a native of Kerry, and he is therefore often called Moling Luachra, from the district of Luachair, on the borders of Cork, Kerry, and Limerick. At his intercession, and in opposition to the advice of St. Adamnan, Finaghty, king of Ireland, remitted the Borumha or cow-tribute to the Leinstermen, which had been exacted for centuries, and which was reimposed many ages afterwards, by Brian Borumha. He died on the 17th of May, 697.

* See the Rev. William Reeves's Edition of Adamnan's Life of St. Columba, from which the above account has been taken.

He is mentioned in O'Clery's Calendar as "Moling Luachra, bishop and confessor, of Tigh-Moling." This place is situated on the Barrow, in the south of the county of Carlow, and was originally called Ros-broc, badger wood; but the saint erected a church there about the middle of the seventh century, and it was afterwards called Tigh-Moling, i. e. St. Moling's house, which is now reduced to St. Mullins. The village of Timolin, in Kildare, took its name from a church erected there by him, and it preserves more correctly the original form, Tigh-Moling.

St. Aengus the Culdee—or, as he is often called, Aengus the Hagiologist—embraced a religious life in the monastery of Clonenagh, in Queen's County; and having made great progress in learning and holiness, he entered the monastery of Tallaght, near Dublin. There he spent several years under St. Maelruain, whom he assisted to compile a Calendar of saints, which is well known as the Martyrology of Tallaght. He was the author of a still more celebrated work, which is now commonly known as the Felire of Aengus, a metrical calendar, in which the saints of each day are commemorated in a stanza of four lines. He died, according to the most probable accounts, about the year 824.*

He built a cell for himself in a lonely spot near Clonenagh, to which he frequently retired for meditation and prayer. It was called from him Disert-Aengusa, Aengus's hermitage, now modernized to Dysartenos; and it is the only place I know that commemorates the name of this venerable man.

CHAPTER IV.

LEGENDS.

MANY of the legends with which the early history of our country abounds are no doubt purely fabulous, the inventions of the old shanachies or story tellers. Great numbers, on the other hand, are obviously founded on historical events; but they have been so distorted and exaggerated by successive generations of romancers, so interwoven with strange or supernatural circumstances, or so far removed from their true date into the regions of antiquity, that they have in many cases quite lost the look of probability. It is impossible to draw an exact line of demarcation between what is partly real and what is wholly fictitious; but some of these shadowy relations possess certain marks, and are corroborated by independent circumstances, which render it extremely probable that they have a foundation of truth.

* See the Life of St. Aengus the Culdee, by the Rev. John O'Hanlon.

It must be carefully borne in mind that the correctness of the interpretations given in this chapter, is not at all affected by the truth or falsehood of the legends connected with the names. It is related in the Dinnsenchus, that Conall Cearnach, one of the most renowned of the Red Branch knights of Ulster in the first century, lived in his old age at Cruachan, the royal palace of Maev, queen of Connaught. Olioll More, Maev's husband, was slain by the old warrior with a cast from a javelin; and the men of Connaught pursued and overtook him at a ford over a river in the present county of Cavan, where the village of Ballyconnell now stands. There they slew him, so that the place was ever after called Bel-atha-Chonaill; and this event is still remembered in the traditions of the neighbourhood.

The reader may or may not believe this story, and some may go so far as to question the very existence of the great chief Conall Cearnach. Nevertheless the name signifies Conall's ford-mouth, for we find it always written in Irish authorities, and pronounced at this day by the natives, Bel-atha-Chonaill; and it is certain that it took its name from some man named Conall, whether it be Conall Cearnach or not.

The accounts handed down to us of the early colonies, belong to the class of historical legends. I have included some of them in the chapter on historical events, and others I shall bring in here; but in this case too it is difficult, and sometimes impossible, to determine the line of separation. They have been transmitted from several ancient authorities, and always with remarkable consistency; many of them are reflected in the traditions of the peasantry; and the truth of several is confirmed by present existing monuments. But to most of them the old historians have assigned an antiquity so incredible or absurd, that many reject them on this account as a mass of fables.

The first who led a colony to Ireland, according to our bardic histories, was a woman named Ceasair or Casar, who came forty days before the deluge, with fifty young women and three men—Bith [Bih], Ladhra [Lara], and Fintan. Ceasair and the three men died soon after their arrival, and gave names to four different places; but they are all now forgotten, with one exception. Bith was buried on a mountain, which was called from him Sliabh Beatha [Baha]. It is well known, and retains the very same name in Irish; but it is called in English Slieve Beagh—a range situated on the confines of Monaghan, Fermanagh, and Tyrone. Bith's cairn still exists, and is a large and conspicuous monument on the top of a hill, in the townland of Carnmore (to which it gives name), parish of Clones, Fermanagh; and it may be seen from the top of the moat of Clones, distant about seven miles north-west.*

The first leader of a colony after the flood was Parthalon, who, with his followers, ultimately took up his residence on the plain anciently called Seanmhagh-Ealta-Edair [Shan-va-alta-edar], the old plain of the flocks of Edar, which stretched along the coast by Dublin, from Tallaght to Edar, or Howth. The legend—which is given in several very ancient authorities—relates that after the people of this colony had lived there for 300 years, they were destroyed by a plague, which in one week carried off 5000 men and 4000 women; and they were buried in a place called, from this circumstance, Taimhleacht-Mhuin-tire-Parthaloin (Four Mast.), the Tavlaght or plague-grave of Parthalon's people. This place, which lies about five miles from Dublin, still retains the name Taimhleacht, modernized to Tallaght; and on the hill, lying beyond the village, there is to be seen at this day a remarkable collection of ancient sepulchral tumuli.

* See O'Donovan's Four Masters, vol. i., p. 3.

The word Taimhleacht, a plague-monument—a place where people who died of an epidemic were buried—is pretty common as a local appellative in various parts of Ireland, under different forms: it is of pagan origin, and so far as I know is not applied to a Christian cemetery, except by adoption, like other pagan terms. In the northern counties it is generally made Tamlaght and Tamlat, while in other places it takes the forms of Tawlaght, Towlaght, and Towlett.

In combination with other words, the first t is often aspirated, which softens it down still more. Thus Derryhowlaght and Derryhawlagh, in Fermanagh, is the oak grove of the plague-grave; Doohamlat, in Monaghan, and Doohallat, in Cavan, black grave.

The Fomorians—a race of pirates who infested the coasts of Ireland, and oppressed the inhabitants—are much celebrated in our histories. They came to Ireland in the time of Nevvu (who led another colony, thirty years after the destruction of Parthalon's people); and their principal stronghold was Tory island. Balor of the great blows was their chief, and two of the tower-like rocks on the east side of Tory, are still called Balor's castle and Balor's prison.

His wife, Cethlenn [Kehlen], seems to have been worthy of her husband. She fought at the second battle of Moyturey, and inflicted a wound on the Dagda, the king of the Tuatha De Dananns, of which he afterwards died. It is stated in the Annals of Clonmacnoise, that Enniskillen received its name from her: in the Irish authorities it is always called Inis-Cethlenn, Cethlenn's island.

At this time there lived on the mainland, opposite Tory, a chieftain named Mac Kineely, who was the owner of the Glasgavlen, a celebrated cow, remembered in tradition all over Ireland. Balor possessed himself of the Glas by a stratagem, and carried her off to Tory; and then Mac Kineely, acting on the directions of a fairy called Biroge of the mountain, concerted a plan of revenge, which many years after led to the death of Balor. When Balor became aware of this, he landed with his band on the mainland coast, and seized on Mac Kineely; and, placing his head on a large white stone, he cut it clean off with one blow of his sword.

Hence the place was called Cloch-Chinnfhaelaidh, which is the name used by the Four Masters and other authorities, signifying Kinfaela's or Kineely's stone; and the pronunciation is well preserved in the present name of the place, Cloghineely. The stone is still to be seen, and is very carefully preserved; it is veined with red, which is the stain of Mac Kineely's blood that penetrated to its centre; and the tourist who is a lover of legend may indulge his taste among the people, who will tell endless stories regarding this wonderful stone.*

The celebrities of the Tuatha De Danann colony have left their names on many localities. From the princess Danann some suppose they derive their name; and from her also two remarkable mountains in Kerry were called Da-chich-Danainne, the two paps of Danann, now well known as the Paps.

* See O'Donovan's Four Masters, vol. i., p. 18, for a very full version of this legend.

One of the most celebrated characters among this people was Manannan Mac Lir, of whom we are told in Cormac's Glossary, and other ancient authorities, that he was a famous merchant who resided in, and gave name to Inis Manann, or the Isle of Man; that he was the best merchant in western Europe; and that he used to know, by examining the heavens, the length of time the fair and the foul weather would last.

He was also called Orbsen; and he was killed by Ullin, grandson of Nuad of the silver hand, in a battle fought at Moycullen, near Lough Corrib, in which the two chiefs contended for the sovereignty of Connaught; "and when his grave was dug, it was then Loch Orbsen burst [out of the grave] over the land, so that it is from him that Loch Orbsen is named." (Yellow Book of Lecan, quoted by O'Curry, Atl. VII., p. 228). This lake is called Loch Orbsen (Orbsen's lake) in all our authorities; and this was changed to the present name, Lough Corrib, by omitting the final syllable, and by the attraction of the c sound from Loch to Orbsen; Boate has it in the intermediate form, Lough Corbes.

Many of the legendary heroes of the Milesian colony are also remembered in local names. When the sons of Milesius came to invade Ireland, a storm was raised by the incantations of the Tuatha De Dananns, which drove them from Inver Sceine, or Kenmare bay, where they had attempted to land, scattered their fleet along the coast, and drowned many of the chiefs and people. Donn, one of the brothers, and all the crew of his ship, were lost on a range of rocks off Kenmare bay, afterwards called in memory of the chief Teach-Dhoinn, i. e. Donn's house, which is the name used by the Irish-speaking peasantry at the present day; but they are called in English the Bull, Cow, and Calf.

Colpa the swordsman, another of the brothers, was drowned in attempting to land at the mouth of the Boyne; and that part of the river was called from him Inver Colptha [Colpa] (Four Mast.), Colpa's river mouth. This name is no longer applied to it; but the parish of Colp, lying on its southern bank, retains the name with little change.

Eimher [Eiver], son of Milesius, landed with his followers at Inver Sceine, and after three days they fought a battle against a party of the Tuatha De Dananns at Slieve Mish, near Tralee, where fell Scota, the wife of Milesius, and Fas, wife of Un. Fas was interred in a glen, called from her Gleann-Faisi (Four Mast.); it is now called Glenofaush, and is situated near Castleisland. The Four Masters state that "the grave of Scota is to be seen between Slieve Mish and the sea;" it is still well known by the name of Scota's grave, and is situated by the Finglas stream; the glen is called Glenscoheen, Scotina's or Scota's glen; and the monument, which was explored some years ago by a party of antiquaries, still remains.

A decisive battle was afterwards fought at Tailltenn, or Teltown, in Meath, in which the Tuatha De Dananns were finally routed: in following up the pursuit, two distinguished Milesian chieftains were slain; namely, Fuad and Cuailgne, the sons of Brogan, grandfather of Milesius. The former fell at Sliabh Fuaid (Four Masters: Fuad's mountain), near Newtownhamilton, in Armagh, which still retains the name of Slieve Fuad; it is the highest of the Fews range; but the two words, Fuad and Fews, have no connexion, the former being much the more ancient.

The place where Cuailgne [Cooley] fell was called Sliabh Cuailgne (Four Masters); it is the mountainous peninsula lying between the bays of Dundalk and Carlingford, and the range of heights still bears the name of the Cooley mountains. From Bladh [Blaw], another of Brogan's sons, was named Sliabh Bladhma (Four Masters), now called Slievebloom. Whether this is the same person who is commemorated in Lickbla, in Westmeath, I cannot tell; but the name signifies "Bladh's flagstone," for the Four Masters write it Liag-Bladhma.

Fial, the wife of Lewy (son of Ith, the uncle of Milesius), gave name to the river Feale, in Kerry: the legend says that her husband unexpectedly came in sight, while she stood naked after bathing in the stream; and that she, not recognising him, immediately died through fear and shame. An abbey, built in later ages on its banks, was called in Irish Mainistir-na-Feile, i. e. the abbey of the river Feale, which is now called Abbeyfeale, and gives name to the town.

Legends about cows are very common. Our Annals relate that Breasal Boidhiobhadh [Bo-yeeva], son of Rury, ascended the throne of Ireland, A. M. 5001. He received his cognomen, because there was a great mortality of cows in his reign: bo, a cow; diobhadh, death. The Annals of Clonmacnoise mention this event in the following words:—"In his time there was such a morren of cows in this land, as there were no more then left alive but one Bull and one Heiffer in the whole kingdom, which Bull and Heiffer lived at a place called Gleann Sawasge." This glen is situated in the county of Kerry, in the parish of Templenoe, north-west of Kenmare, and near the valley of Glencare; and it is still called Glenn-samhaisce [sowshkě], the valley of the heifer. The tradition is well remembered in the county, and they tell many wonderful stories of this bull and heifer, from which, they maintain, the whole race of Irish cows is descended.

There is a small lake in the island of Inishbofin, off the coast of Connemara, in which there lives an enchanted white cow, or bo finn, which appears above the waters at certain times; hence the lake is called Loch-bo-finne, the lake of the white cow, and it has given name to the island. Bede calls the island Inis-bo-finde, and interprets it "the island of the white cow."

There is another Inishbofin in Lough Ree on the Shannon, which in Colgan's Life of St. Aidus is similarly translated; and another off the coast of Donegal, south of Tory island. We find also Lough Bofin and Lough Bodergh (of the red cow), on the Shannon; Corrabofin near Ballybay, in Monaghan (properly Carrowbofin, the quarter-land of the white cow); Gortbofinna (Gort, a field), near Mallow, in Cork; Drombofinny (Drom, a ridge), in the parish of Desertserges, same county; Lisbofin, in Fermanagh and Armagh; Lisboduff (the fort of the black cow), in Cavan, and many others. It is very probable that these names also are connected with legends.

There are several places in Ireland whose names end with urcher, from the Irish word urchur, a throw, cast, or shot. In every such place there is a legend of some remarkable cast of a weapon, memorable for its prodigious length, for killing some great hero, a wild animal or infernal serpent, or for some other sufficient reason. For example, Urcher itself is the name of three townlands in Armagh, Cavan, and Monaghan; and in the last-mentioned county, in the parish of Currin, there is a place called Drumurcher, the ridge of the cast.

The most remarkable of these mighty casts is commemorated at the place now called Ardnurcher, in Westmeath — a cast that ultimately caused the death of Conor Mac Nessa, king of Ulster in the first century. The name Ardnurcher is a corruption, and the proper form would be Athnurcher; the Four Masters, in recording the erection of the castle in 1192, whose ruins are still there, call it Ath-an-urchair; and the natives still call it in Irish Baile-atha-an-urchair, which they pronounce Blaanurcher.

Conall Cearnach, on a certain occasion, slew in single combat a Leinster chieftain named Mesgedhra [Mesgēra], whose brains—according to a barbarous custom then prevalent—he mixed with lime, and made of them a hard round ball, which he kept both as a weapon and as a trophy. There was at this time a war raging between Ulster and Connaught, and Ceat [Keth] mac Magach, a Connaught chief, having by a stratagem obtained possession of the ball, kept it always slung from his girdle; for it had been prophesied that Mesgēra would be revenged of the Ulstermen after his death, and Ceat hoped that this prophecy would be fulfilled by means of the ball.

Ceat went one time with his band, to plunder some of the Ulster territories, and returning with a great spoil of cattle, he was pursued and overtaken by an army of Ulstermen under the command of Conor, and a battle was fought between them. The Connaught chief contrived to separate the king from his party, and watching his opportunity, he cast the ball at him from his tabhall or sling; and the ball struck the king on the head, and lodged in his skull. His physican Fingen was brought, and he declared that the king would die immediately if the ball were removed; but that if it were left so, and provided the king kept himself free from all inquietude, he would live.

And his head was stitched up with a golden thread, and he lived in this state for seven years, till the day of our Lord's Crucifixion; when, observing the unusual darkness, he sent for Bacrach, his druid, and asked him what it meant. Bacrach told him that the Son of God was on that day crucified by the Jews. "That is a pity," said Conor; "were I in His presence, I would slay those who were around my king, putting him to death." And with that he rushed at a grove that stood near, and began hewing it with his sword, to show how he would deal with the Jews; and from the excessive fury which seized him, the ball started from his head, and some of his brain gushed out; and in that way he died.

The place where Conor was wounded was called Ath-an-urchair, the ford of the cast; which Michael O'Clery, in a fly-leaf note in O'Clery's Calendar, identifies with Ath-an-urchair or Ardnurcher, in Westmeath (see O'Curry's Lect., p. 636).

Many other legendary exploits of the heroic times are commemorated in local names, as well as casts of a spear. A favourite mode of exhibiting physical activity among the ancients, as well as the moderns, was by a leap; but if we are to believe in the prodigious bounds ascribed by legend to some of our forefathers, the members of our athletic clubs may well despair of competing with them. The word leim, a leap will be discussed hereafter, but I may remark here that it is generally applied to these leaps of the ancient heroes.

The legend that gave name to Loop Head in Clare is still well remembered by the people. Cuchullin [Cukullin], the chief of the Red Branch knights of Ulster, endeavouring once to escape from a woman by whom he was pursued, made his way southwards to the extremity of the county of Clare, where he unhappily found himself in a cul-de-sac, with the furious termagant just behind him. There is a little rock called Bullán-na-léime (leap rock), rising over the waves, about twenty-five feet beyond the cape, on which the chief alighted with a great bound from the mainland; and the woman, nothing daunted by the raging chasm, sprang after him; when, exerting all his strength, he leaped back again to the mainland—a much more difficult feat than the first—and his pursuer, attempting to follow him, fell short into the boiling sea. Hence the cape was called Leim-Chonchuillinn, Cuchullin's Leap, which is the name always used by ancient Irish writers, as for instance by the Four Masters; afterwards it was more commonly called, as it is at the present day in Irish, Ceann-Leime [Canleama], the head of the leap, or Leap Head, of which the present name Loop Head seems a Danish modification. Ceann-Leime is also the Irish name of Slyne Head, in Galway; but I do not know the legend, if there be one (see page 75).

There are several places whose names contain this word leim in such a way as to render it probable that they are connected with legends. Such for example is Leamirlea, in the parish of Kilmalkedar, Kerry, Leim-fhir-leith, the leap of the grey man; Leamydoody, and Leamyglissan in Kerry; and Leamybrien, in Waterford; which mean respectively, O'Dowd's, O'Gleeson's, and O'Brien's leap. Leap Castle, in King's County, near Roscrea, the ruins of which are still to be seen, is called by the Four Masters Leim-ui-Bhanain, O'Banan's leap.

The name of Lough Derg, on the Shannon, reminds us of the almost unlimited influence of the bards in old times, of the merciless way in which they often exercised it, and the mingled feelings of dread and reverence with which they were regarded by all, both nobles and people. This great and long continued power, which some of the Irish monarchs found it necessary to check by severe legislation, is an undoubted historic fact; and the legend transmits a very vivid picture of it, whether the circumstance it records happened or not. It is one of the incidents in an ancient tale called Forbais Edair, or the Siege of Howth (see O'Curry's Lect., p. 266).

Aithirne [Ahirny], a celebrated Ulster poet of the time of Conor mac Nessa, once undertook a journey through Ireland, and of every king through whose territories he passed, he made the most unreasonable and outrageous request he could think of, none of whom dared refuse him. Eochy mac Luchta was at that time king of south Connaught and Thomond, and had but one eye. The malicious poet, when leaving his kingdom, asked him for his eye, which the king at once plucked out and gave him; and then desiring his attendant to lead him down to the lake, on the shore of which he had his residence, he stooped down and washed the blood from his face. The attendant remarked to him that the lake was red with his blood; and the king thereupon said:—"Then Loch-Dergdherc [Dergerk] shall be its name for ever;" and so the name remains. The lake is called by this name, which signifies "the lake of the red eye," in all our old authorities, and the present name Lough Derg is merely a contraction of the original.

In the parish of Kilgobban in Kerry, about eight miles west of Tralee, is situated the beautiful valley of Glannagalt; and it was believed not only in Kerry, but over the whole of Ireland, wherever the glen was known, that all lunatics, no matter in what part of the country, would ultimately, if left to themselves, find their way to this glen to be cured. Hence the name, Gleann-na-ngealt, the valley of the lunatics. There are two wells in the glen, called Tobernagalt, the lunatics' well, to which the madmen direct their way, crossing the little stream that flows through the valley, at a spot called Ahagaltaun, the madman's ford, and passing by Cloghnagalt, the standing stone of the lunatics; and they drink of the healing waters, and eat some of the cresses that grow on the margin:—the water and the cress, and the secret virtue of the valley, will restore the poor wanderers to sanity.

The belief that gave origin to these strange pilgrimages, whatever may have been its source, is of great antiquity. In the ancient Fenian tale called Cath Finntragha, or "The battle of Ventry," we are told that Dairë Dornmhar, "The monarch of the world," landed at Ventry to subjugate Erin, the only country yet unconquered; and Finn-mac-Cumhail and his warriors marched southwards to oppose him. Then began a series of combats, which lasted for a year and a day, and Erin was successfully defended against the invaders. In one of these conflicts, Gall, the son of the king of Ulster, a youth of fifteen, who had come to Finn's assistance, "having entered the battle with extreme eagerness, his excitement soon increased to absolute frenzy, and after having performed astounding deeds of valour, he fled in a state of derangement from the scene of slaughter, and never stopped till he plunged into the wild seclusion of this valley." (O'Curry, Lect., p. 315.) O'Curry seems to say that Gall was the first lunatic who went there, and that the custom originated with him.

There is another Fenian legend, well known in Donegal, which accounts for the name of Lough Finn, and of the river Finn, which issues from it and joins the Mourne near Lifford. The following is the substance, as taken down from the peasantry by O'Donovan; but there is another and somewhat different version in "The Donegal Highlands." Finn Mac Cumhail once made a great feast in the Finn Valley, and sent two of his heroes, Goll and Fergoman, to bring him a fierce bull that grazed on the borders of the lake. On their way, they fell in with a litter of young pigs, which they killed and left there, intending to call for them on their way back, and bring them for the feast; but Finn, who had a foreknowledge of some impending evil, ascended a hill, and with a mighty voice, called to the heroes to return by a different route.

They returned each with his half of the bull; Goll obeyed Finn's injunction, but Fergoman, disregarding it, approached the spot where he left the litter, and saw an enormous wild sow, the mother of the brood, standing over their bodies. She immediately rushed on him to revenge their death, and a furious fight began, the sow using her tusks, the warrior his ear.

Fergoman had a sister named Finn, who was as like as himself; and after long fighting, when he was lacerated by the sow's tusks and in danger of death, he raised a great shout for his sister's help. She happened to be standing at the same side of the lake, but she heard the echo of the shout from the cliffs on the opposite side; she immediately plunged in, and swam across, but as she reached the shore, the voice came from the side she had left; and when she returned, the echo came resounding again from the opposite cliffs. And so she crossed and recrossed, till the dreadful dying shouts of Fergoman so overwhelmed her with grief and terror, that she sank in the middle of the lake and was drowned. Hence it was called Loch Finne, the lake of Finn, and gave also its name to the river.

The place where the heroes killed the young pigs, and where Fergoman met his fate, is still called Meenanall, in Irish Mín-an-áil, the meen or mountain flat of the litter; and the wild sow gave name to Lough Muck, the lake of the pig, lying a little south of Lough Finn.

Whatever may be thought of this wild legend, it is certain that the lake received its name from a woman named Finn, for it is always called in Irish, Loch Finnē, which bears only one interpretation, Finn's or Finna's lake; and this is quite consistent with the name given by Adamnan to the river, namely Finda. The suggestion sometimes put forth, that the name was derived from the word finn, white or clear, is altogether out of the question; for the waters of both, so far from being clear, are from their source all the way down to Lifford, particularly remarkable for their inky blackness.

Among the many traditions handed down by the Irish people, none are more universal than that of the bursting forth of lakes. Almost every considerable lake in Ireland has its own story of an enchanted well, which by the fatal neglect of some fairy injunction, or on account of an affront offered to its guardian spirit, suddenly overflowed the valley, and overwhelmed the inhabitants with their cattle and their houses in one common ruin.

Nor is this tradition of recent origin, for we find lake eruptions recorded in our most ancient annals; and nearly all the principal lakes in Ireland are accounted for in this manner. There is one very remarkable example of an occurrence of this kind in comparatively recent times, namely, in the year 1490; at which year the Four Masters record:—"There was a great earthquake (maidhm talmhan, an eruption of the earth) at Sliabh Gamh (the Ox mountains), by which a hundred persons were destroyed, among whom was the son of Manus Crossagh O'Hara. Many horses and cows were also killed by it, and much putrid fish was thrown up; and a lake in which fish is [now] caught, sprang up in the place." This lake is now dried up, but it has left its name on the townland of Moymlough, in Irish Maidhm-loch, the erupted lake, in the parish of Killoran, county of Sligo; and a vivid tradition of the event still prevails in the county. (See O'Donovan's Four Masters, Vol. IV., p. 1185).

I will digress here for a moment to remark that the word madhm [maum or moym] is used in the western counties from Mayo to Kerry, and especially in Connemara, to denote a mountain pass or chasm; in which application the primary sense of breaking or bursting asunder is maintained. This is the origin of the several places called Maum in these counties, some of which are well known to tourists—such as Maum Hotel; Maumturk, the pass of the boars;

Maumakeogh, the pass of the mist, &c. In Mayo we find Maumnaman, the pass of the women; and in Kerry Maumnahaltora, of the altar.

The origin of Lough Erne, in Fermanagh, is pretty fully stated in the Annals of the Four Masters; and it is also given in the Leabhar Gabhala, and in O'Flaherty's Ogygia. Fiacha Labhruinne [Feeka Lavrinna] was king of Ireland from A. M. 3727 to 3751; and it is related that he gained several battles during his reign, in one of which he defeated the Ernai, a tribe of Firbolgs, who dwelt on the plain now covered by the lake. "After the battle was gained from them, the lake flowed over them, so that it was from them the lake is named [Loch-Eirne], that is, a lake over the Ernai."

Our most ancient records point to the eruption of Lough Neagh as having occurred in the end of the first century. From the universality of the tradition, as well as its great antiquity, it seems highly probable that some great inundation actually occurred about the time mentioned; and the well known shallowness of the lake lends some corroboration to the truth of the records. Giraldus, who evidently borrowed the story from the native writers, relates that it was formed by the overflowing of a fairy fountain, which had been accidentally left uncovered; and mentions what the people will tell you to this day, that the fishermen sometimes see the lofty and slender ecclesiasticæ turres, or round towers, beneath its waters—a belief which Moore has embalmed in the well-known lines:—

" On Lough Neagh's banks as the fisherman strays,
When the clear cold eve's declining,
He sees the round tower of other days
In the waves beneath him shining."

The ancient name of the territory now covered by the lake, was Liathmhuine [Leafony], and it was taken possession of by a Munster chieftain named Eochy Mac Maireda, after he had expelled the previous inhabitants. He occupied the plain at the time of the eruption, and he and all his family were drowned, except one daughter and two sons. Hence the lake was called Loch-nEchach [Lough Nehagh], i. e. Eochy's lake, which is its name in all our ancient writings, and of which the present name has preserved the sound, a little shortened. The N which now forms the first letter does not belong to the word; it is what is sometimes called the prosthetic n, and is a mere grammatical accident. The name often occurs without it; for instance, in the Book of Leinster it is given both ways—Loch-nEthach, and Loch-Echach; and we find it spelled Lough Eaugh in Camden, as well as in many of the maps of the 16th and 17th centuries.

This eruption is mentioned in an ancient poem, published by Dr. Todd (Irish Nennius, p. 267), from the Book of Leinster; and from this also it appears that Linnmhuine [Linwinny], the lake of the shrubbery, in allusion to the old name of the territory, was another name for the lake:—

“ *Eochy Maireda, the rebellious son,
Of wonderful adventure,
Who was overwhelmed in lucid Linnmhuine,
With the clear lake over him.*”

Eochy's daughter, Liban, is the subject of an exceedingly wild legend, for which see Reeves's Ecclesiastical Antiquities, p. 376.

CHAPTER V.

FAIRIES, DEMONS, GOBLINS, AND GHOSTS.

It is very probable that the belief in the existence of fairies, so characteristic of the Keltic race of these countries, came in with the earliest colonies. On this question, however, I do not intend to enter: it is sufficient to observe here, that the belief in all its reality is recorded in the oldest of our native writings, and that with a distinctness and circumstantiality that prove it to have been, at the time of which they treat, long established and universally received.

It was believed that these supernatural beings dwelt in habitations in the interior of pleasant hills, which were called by the name of sidh or sith [shee]. Colgan's explanation of this term is so exact, and he gives such an admirable epitome of the superstition respecting the sidh and its inhabitants, that I will here translate his words:—"Fantastical spirits are by the Irish called men of the sidh, because they are seen as it were to come out of beautiful hills to infest men; and hence the vulgar believe that they reside in certain subterraneous habitations within these hills; and these habitations, and sometimes the hills themselves, are called by the Irish sidhe or siodha."

In Colgan's time the fairy superstition had descended to the common people—the vulgus; for the spread of the Faith, and the influence of education, had disenthralled the minds of the better classes. But in the fifth century, the existence of the duinē sidhe was an article of belief with the high as well as with the low; as may be inferred from the following curious passage in the Book of Armagh, where we find the two daughters of Laeghaire [Leary], king of Ireland, participating in this superstition:—"Then St. Patrick came to the well which is called Clebach, on the sides of Cruachan towards the east; and before sunrise they (Patrick and his companions) sat down near the well. And lo! the two daughters of king Laeghaire, Ethne the fair and Fedelm the ruddy, came early to the well to wash, after the manner of women; and they found near the well a synod of holy bishops with Patrick. And they knew not whence they were, or in what form, or from what people, or from what country; but they supposed them to be Duine sidhe, or gods of the earth, or a phantasm." (Todd's Life of St. Patrick, p. 452). Dr. Todd adds in a note:—" Duine sidhe, the men of the sidhe, or phantoms, the name given by the Irish to the fairies—men of the hills; the word sidhe or siodha signifies the habitations supposed to belong to these aerial beings, in the hollows of the hills and mountains. It is doubtful whether the word is cognate with the Lat. sedes, or from a Celtic root side, a blast of wind."

The belief of king Laeghaire's daughters regarding these aerial beings, as related in a MS. of the year 807, is precisely the same as it was in the time of Colgan, and the superstition has descended to our own time in all its integrity. Its limits are indeed further circumscribed; but at the present day the peasantry in remote districts believe that the fairies inhabit the sidhe, or hills, and that occasionally mortals are favoured with a view of their magnificent palaces.

In our old authorities it is very often stated that the fairies are the Tuatha De Dananns; and the chiefs of this race—such as the Dagda, Bove Dearg, &c.—are frequently referred to as the architects and inhabitants of the sidhe. For example, in the copy of the "History of the Cemeteries" contained in the MS. H. 3. 17, T. C. D., the following statement occurs relating to the death of Cormac mac Art:—"Or it was the siabhras that killed him, i. e. the Tuatha De Dananns, for they were called siabhras." In some cases, however, the sidhe were named after the chiefs of the Milesian colony, as in case of Sidh-Aedha at Ballyshannon; and at present the Tuatha De Danann origin of these aerial beings, seems to be quite forgotten; for almost all raths, cashels, and mounds—the dwellings, forts, and sepulchres of the Firbolgs and Milesians, as well as those of the Tuatha De Dananns—are considered as fairy haunts.

Of this ancient Tuatha De Danann people our knowledge is very scant indeed; but, judging from many very old tales and references in our MSS., and from the works supposed to be executed by this race, of which numerous remains still exist—sepulchral mounds, gracefully formed slender spearheads, &c.—we may conclude that they were a people of superior intelligence and artistic skill, and that they were conquered and driven into remote districts, by the less intelligent but more warlike Milesian tribes who succeeded them. Their knowledge and skill procured for them the reputation of magicians; and the obscure manner in which they were forced to live after their subjugation, in retired and lonely places, gradually impressed the vulgar with the belief that they were supernatural beings.

It is not probable that the subjugation of the Tuatha De Dananns, with the subsequent belief regarding them, was the origin of Irish fairy mythology. This superstition, no doubt, existed previously; and this mysterious race, having undergone a gradual deification, became confounded and identified with the original local gods, and ultimately superseded them altogether.

The most ancient and detailed account of their final dispersion is found in the Book of Fermoy, a MS. of the year 1463; where it is related in the tale of Curchog, daughter of Manannan Mac Lir, that the Tuatha De Dananns, after the two disastrous battles of Tailteann and Druim Lighean, held a meeting at Brugh, on the Boyne, under the presidency of Manannan; and by his advice they distributed and quartered themselves on the pleasant hills and plains of Erin. Bodhbh [Bove] Dearg, son of the Daghdá, was chosen king; and Manannan, their chief counsellor, arranged the different places of abode for the nobles among the hills.

Several of the sidhs mentioned in this narrative are known, and some of them are still celebrated as fairy haunts. Sidh Buidhbh [Boov], with Bove Dearg for its chief, was on the shore of Lough Derg, somewhere near Portumna. Several hills in Ireland, noted fairy haunts, took their names from this chief, and others from his daughter, Bugh [Boo]. One of the former is Knockavoe, near Strabane, which the Four Masters write Cnoc-Buidhbh, the hill of Bodhbh; and from the daughter is named Canbo, in the parish of Killumod, Roscommon, which Duál M'Firbis writes Ceann-Bugha, i. e. Bugh's head or hill.

Sidh Truim, under the guardianship of Midir, was situated a little to the east of Slane, on the Boyne, but its name and legend are now forgotten. Sidh Neannta, under Sidhmall, is now called Mullaghshee, and is situated near Lanesborough, in the county Roscommon. Sidh Meadha [Mā], over which presided Finn-bharr [Finvar], is the well-known mountain now called Knockma, five miles south-west of Tuam ; the tradition respecting it is still preserved in all its vividness ; and the exploits of Finvara, its guardian fairy, are celebrated all over Ireland.

Sidh Aodha Ruaidh, another of these celebrated fairy resorts, is the hill now called Mullaghshee, on which the modern church is built, at Ballyshannon, in Donegal. The Book of Leinster and other ancient authorities relate that Aedh-Ruadh [Ay-roo], the father of Macha, founder of Emania (see p. 82), was drowned in the cataract at Ballyshannon, which was thence called after him, Eas-Ruaidh, or Eas-Aedha-Ruaidh [Assroo, Assayroo], now shortened to Assaroe. He was buried over the cataract, in the mound which was called from him Sidh-Aedha—a name still partly preserved in Mullaghshee, the hill of the sidh or fairy palace.

These are a few illustrations of the extent to which the fairy mythology was accepted in Ireland in remote ages. But, even if history were wholly silent regarding the former prevalence of this belief, it would be sufficiently attested by the great numbers of places, scattered all over the country, whose names contain the word sidh, or, as it is usually modernized, shee. It must be borne in mind that every one of these places was once firmly believed to be a fairy mansion, inhabited by those mysterious beings, and that in case of many of them, the same superstition lurks at this day in the minds of the peasantry.

Sidh, as we have seen, was originally applied to a fairy palace, and it was afterwards gradually transferred to the hill, and ultimately to the fairies themselves ; but this last transition must have begun at a very early period, for we find it expressly stated in a passage in the Leabhar na hUidhre, that the ignorant called the fairies sith. At the present day, the word generally signifies a fairy, but the diminutive sidheóg [sheeoge] is more commonly employed. When sidh forms part of a name, it is often not easy to determine whether it means the fairies themselves or their habitations.

Shee and its modifications constitute or begin the names of about seventy townlands, which are pretty equally distributed over the four provinces, very few being found, however, in the counties of Louth, Dublin, and Wicklow. Besides these, there are many more places whose names contain this word in the middle or end; and there are innumerable fairy hills and forts through the country, designated by the word shee, which have not communicated their names to townlands.

Sidh-dhruim, fairy ridge—the old name of the Rock of Cashel—is still the name of six townlands in Armagh under the modern form Sheetrim; Sheerevagh, in Roscommon and Sligo, grey shee; Sheegorey, near Boyle, the fairy hill of Guaire or Gorey, a man's name. There is a townland in the parish of Corbally, Tipperary, called The Sheehys, or in Irish, Na síthe, i. e. the fairy mounts; and a range of low heights south of Trim, in Meath, is well known by the name of the Shee hills, i. e. the fairy hills.

There is a famous fairy palace on the eastern shoulder of Slievenamon mountain, in Tipperary. According to a metrical romance contained in the Book of Lismore and other authorities, the Tuatha De Danann women of this sidh enchanted Finn mac Cumhail and his Fianna; and from these women the mountain took its name. It is now called in Irish, Sliabh-na-mban-fionn, which would signify the mountain of the fair-haired women; but O'Donovan shows that the true name is Sliabh-na-mban-Feimhinn [Slievenamon Fevin], the mountain of the women of Feimheann, which was an ancient territory coextensive with the barony of Iffa and Offa East; and this was shortened to the present name, Sliabh-na-mban, or Slievenamon.

The word occurs still more frequently in the end of names; and in this case it may be generally taken to be of greater antiquity than the part of the name that precedes it. There is a parish in Longford called Killashee, which was probably so called because the church was built near or on the site of one of these mounts. Killashee in Kildare has, however, a different origin. Cloonshee, near Elphin, in the county Roscommon, is called by the Four Masters Cluain-sithe, fairy meadow; and there are several other places of the same name. Rashee, in Antrim, where St. Patrick is recorded to have founded a church, is in Irish Rath-sithe (Four Masters), the fort of the fairies.

The word sidh undergoes several local modifications; for example Knocknasheega near Cappoquin, in Waterford, is called in Irish Cnoc-na-síge, the hill of the fairies; and the name of Cheek Point on the Suir below Waterford, is merely an adaptation from Sheega point; for the Irish name is Póinte-na-síge, the point of the fairies. The townland of Sheegys (i. e. fairy hills) in the parish of Kilbarron, Donegal, was once no doubt a favourite resort of fairies; and on its southern boundary, near high water mark, there is a mound called Mulnasheefrog, the hill of the fairy dwellings. In the parish of Aghanagh, Sligo, there are two townlands, called Cuilsheeghary, which the people call in Irish, Coill-siothchaire, the fairies' wood, for a large wood formerly stood there.

While sidheóg means a fairy, the other diminutive sidheán [sheeawn] is always applied to a fairy mount. The word is used in this sense all over Ireland, but it is particularly common in Connaught, where these sheeauns are met with in great numbers; they are generally beautiful green round hillocks, with an old fort on the summit. Their numbers would lead one to believe that in old times, some parts of Connaught must have been more thickly peopled with fairies than with men.

Great numbers of places have taken their names from these haunted hills; and the word assumes various forms, such as Sheaun, Sheehaun, Sheean, and Shean, which give names to about thirty townlands scattered through the four provinces. It is not unfrequently changed to Sion, as in the parish of Laraghbryan in Kildare, where the place now so called evidently took its name from a sheeaun, for it is written Shiane in an Inquisition of James I.; and there are several other instances of this odd corruption. Near Ballybay, in Monaghan, is a place called Shane, another form of the word; and the plural Shanes, fairy hills, occurs in the parish of Loughguile, Antrim. Sheena in Leitrim, Sheeny in Meath, and Fermanagh, and Sheeana in Wicklow, are different forms of the Irish plural sidhne, fairy hills.

The sound of the s is often eclipsed by t (p. 22), and this gives rise to further modifications. There is a castle called Ballinteean giving name to a townland in the parish of Ballysokeery, Mayo, which is written by M'Firbis, Baile-an-tsiodhain, the town of the fairy hill; the same name occurs near Ballinrobe in the same county, and in the parish of Kilglass, Sligo; while in Down and Kildare it takes the form of Ballintine. Aghintain, near Clogher in Tyrone, would be written in the original, Achadh-an-tsiadhain, the field of the fairy mount.

Most of the different kinds of fairies, so well-known at the present day to those acquainted with the Irish peasantry, have also been commemorated in local names. A few of those I will here briefly mention, but the subject deserves more space than I can afford.*

The Pooka — Irish púca — is an odd mixture of merriment and malignity; his exploits form the subject of innumerable legendary narratives; and every literary tourist who visits our island, seems to consider it a duty to record some new story of this capricious goblin. Under the name of Puck, he will be recognized as the “merry wanderer of the night,” who boasts that he can “put a girdle round about the earth in forty minutes;” and the genius of Shakespeare has conferred on him a kind of immortality he never expected.

There are many places all over Ireland where the pooka is still well-remembered, and where, though he has himself forsaken his haunts, he has left his name, to attest his former reign of terror. One of the best known is Pollaphuca in Wicklow, a wild chasm where the Liffey falls over a ledge of rocks into a deep pool, to which the name properly belongs, signifying the pool or hole of the Pooka. There are three townlands in Clare, and several other places in different parts of the country, with the same name; they are generally wild lonely dells, caves, chasms in rocks on the sea shore, or pools in deep glens like that in Wicklow—all places of a lonely character, suitable haunts for this mysterious sprite. The original name of Puckstown in the parish of Mosstown, in Louth, and probably of Puckstown near Artaine in Dublin, was Pollaphuca, of which the present name is an incorrect translation. Carrigaphooca (the Pooka's rock) two miles west of Macroon, where on the top of a rock overhanging the Sullane, stand the ruins of the M'Carthys' castle, is well-known as the place whence Daniel O'Rourke began his adventurous voyage to the moon on the back of an eagle; and here, for many a generation, the Pooka held his "ancient solitary reign," and played pranks which the peasantry will relate with minute detail.

* See Crofton Croker's “Irish Fairy Legends,” and Wilde's “Irish popular Superstitions.”

About half way between Kilfinnane in Limerick, and Mitchelstown in Cork, the bridge of Ahaphuca crosses the Ounageeragh river at the junction of its two chief branches, and on the boundary of the two counties. Before the erection of the bridge, this was a place of evil repute, and not without good reason, for on stormy winter nights, many a traveller was swept off by the flood in attempting to cross the dangerous ford; these fatalities were all attributed to the malice of the goblin that haunted the place; and the name—the Pooka's ford—still reminds us of his deeds of darkness.

He is often found lurking in raths and lisses; and accordingly there are many old forts through the country called Lissaphuca and Rathpooka, which have, in some cases, given names to townlands. In the parish of Kilcolman, in Kerry, are two townlands called Rathpoge on the Ordnance map, and Rathpooke in other authorities—evidently Rathpuca, the Pooka's rath. Sometimes his name is shortened to pook, or puck; as for instance, in Castlepook, the Goblin's castle, a black, square, stern-looking old tower, near Doneraile, in Cork, in a dreary spot, at the foot of the Ballyhoura hills, as fit a place for a pooka as could be conceived. This form is also found in the name of the great moat of Cloghpook, in Kilkenny, the stone or stone fortress of the pooka; and, according to O'Donovan, the name of Ploopluck, near Naas, in Kildare, is a corruption—a very vile one indeed—of the same name.

The word siabhra [sheevra] is now very frequently employed to denote a fairy, and we have found it used in this sense in the quotation at page 169 from the "History of the Cemeteries." This term appears in the names of several places: there is, for example, a townland called Drumsheaver, in the parish of Tedavnet, Monaghan, but which is written in several modern authorities, Drumshevery, the ridge of the sheevras; and they must have also haunted Glenna-sheever, in the parish of Inishmacsaint, in Fermanagh.

Nor is the leprechaun forgotten—the merry sprite "Whom maids at night, Oft meet in glen that's haunted," who will give you the sparán scillingé, an inexhaustible fairy purse, if you can only manage to hold him spell-bound by an uninterrupted gaze. This lively little fellow is known by several different names, such as luprachaun, lurricane, lurrigadane, clurricane, luppercadane, &c. In the townland of Creevagh, near Cong, in Mayo, there is a cave called Mullenlupraghaun, the leprechauns' mill, "where in former times the people left their caskeens of corn at nightfall, and found them full of meal in the morning" (Wilde's Lough Corrib)—ground by the leprechauns. And it is certain that they must have long chosen, as favourite haunts, Knocknalooricaun (the hill of the looricauns), near Lismore, in Waterford, and Poulaluppercadaun (poul, a hole), near Killorglin, in Kerry.

Every one knows that fairies are a merry race, and that they enjoy immensely their midnight gambols: moreover, it would seem that they indulge in many of the ordinary peasant pastimes. The fairy fort of Lisfarbegnagommaun stands in the townland of Knocknagraigue East, four miles from Corrofin, in Clare; and whoever cautiously approaches it on a calm moonlight night, will probably see a spectacle worth remembering—the little inhabitants, in all their glory, playing at the game of comán, or hurley. Their favourite amusement is told clearly enough in the name Lios-fear-beg-na-gcomán, the fort of the little hurlers. Sam Lover must have been well acquainted with their pastimes when he wrote his pretty song, “The fairies are dancing by brake and by bower;” and indeed he probably saw them himself, “lightly tripping o’er the green,” in one of the many forts, where they indulge in their nightly revelry, and which are still called Lissarinka, the fort of the dancing.

Readers of Crofton Croker will recollect the story of the rath of Knockgraffon, and how the little man, Lusmore, sitting down to rest himself near the fort, heard a strain of wild music from the inside. Knockgraffon is not the only “airy” place where the ceól-sidhe, or fairy music, is heard; in fact this is a very common way of manifesting their presence; and accordingly certain raths in the south of Ireland are known by the name of Lissakeole, the fort of the music. Neilson (Irish Gram., page 55) mentions a hill in the county of Down, called Knocknafeadalea, whistling hill, from the music of the fairies which was often heard to proceed from it; and the townland of Lisnafeddaly (the fort of the whistling) took its name from a lis with the same reputation.

The life of a fairy is not, however, all merriment. Sometimes the little people of two neighbouring forts quarrel, and fight sanguinary battles. These encounters always take place by night. The human inhabitants are terrified by shrill screams and other indescribable noises; and in the morning the fields are strewn with drops of blood, little bones, and other relics of the fight. Certain forts in some of the northern counties, whose inhabitants were often engaged in warfare, have, from these conflicts, got the name of Lisnasragh, the fort of the screeching.

Very often when you pass a lonely fort on a dark night, you will be astonished to see a light shining from it; the fairies are then at some work of their own, and you will do well to pass on and not disturb them. From the frequency of this apparition, it has come to pass that many forts are called Lisnagannell and Lisnagunnell, the fort of the candles; and in some instances they have given names to townlands, as, for example, Lisnagonnell, in the county Down, Lisnageenly, in Tipperary; Lisgonnell, in Tyrone; and Lisconnell, in Mayo. We must not suppose that these fearful lights are always the creation of the peasant's imagination; no doubt they have been in many instances actually seen, and we must attribute them to that curious phenomenon, ignis fatuus, or Will-o'-the-wisp. But the people will not listen to this, for they know well that all such apparitions are the work of the good people.

Fairies are not the only supernatural beings let loose on the world by night; there are ghosts, phantoms, and demons of various kinds; and the name of many a place still tells the dreaded scenes nightly enacted there. The word dealbh, a shape or image, is often applied to a ghost. The townland of Killeen-nagallive, in the parish of Templebredon, Tipperary, took its name from an old churchyard, where the dead must have rested unquietly in their graves; for the name is a corruption (p. 52) of Cillín-na-nddealbh, the little church of the phantoms. So also Drumnanaliv, in Monaghan, and Clondallow, in Kings county, the ridge and the meadow of the spectres. And in some of the central counties, certain clusters of thorn bushes, which have the reputation of being haunted, are called by the name of Dullowbush (dullow i. e. dealbh), i. e. the phantom bush.

There is a hideous kind of hobgoblin generally met with in churchyards, called a dullaghan, who can take off and put on his head at will—in fact, you generally meet him with that member in his pocket, under his arm, or absent altogether; or if you have the fortune to light on a number of them, you may see them amusing themselves by flinging their heads at one another, or kicking them for footballs. Ballindollaghan, in the parish of Baslick, Roscommon, must be a horrible place to live in, if the dullaghan that gave it the name ever shows himself now to the inhabitants. Every one knows that a ghost without a head is very usual, not only in Ireland, but all over the world; and a little lake in the parish of Donaghmore, in Donegal, four miles south of Stranorlar, is still called Lough Gillagancan, the headless man's lake, from having been haunted by one of these visitants. But I suppose it is only in Ireland you could meet with a ghost without a shirt. Several of these tasteless fellows must have at some former period roamed nightly at large in some of the northern counties, where there are certain small lakes, which are now called Lough Gil-laganleny, the lake of the shirtless fellow : one, for instance, two miles east of the northern extremity of Lough Eask, near the town of Donegal; and another in the parish of Rossinver, in Leitrim, five miles north-east from Manorhamilton.

Glennawoo, a townland in the parish of Kilmacteige, Sligo, must have been, and perhaps is still, a ghastly neighbourhood, for the name Gleann-na-bhfuath signifies the glen of the spectres; and in the parish of Aghavea, Fermanagh, is a place which was doubtless almost as bad, viz., Drumarraght, the ridge of the arraght or apparition. Near the church of Kilnamona in Clare, there is a well called Toberatasha; it is in the form of a coffin, and its shape is not more dismally suggestive than its name, Tobar-a'-taise, the well of the fetch or ghost. What kind of malignant beings formerly tormented the people of Dromahaire, in Leitrim, it is now impossible to tell; and we should be ignorant of their very existence, if our annalists had not preserved the true form of the name—Druim-da-ethiar (Four Masters), the ridge of the two air-demons.

Besides the celebrated fairy haunts mentioned at p. 170, there are several other places in different parts of Ireland, presided over, each by its own guardian spirit, and among them several female fairies, or banshees. Some of these are very famous, and, though belonging to particular places, are celebrated by the bards over the whole of Ireland.

Cliodhna [Cleena] is the potent banshee that rules as queen over the fairies of south Munster; and you will hear innumerable stories among the peasantry, of the exercise of her powerful spells. Edward Walsh makes his lover of "O'Donovan's Daughter" thus express himself:—

“God grant ’tis no fay from Knockfierna that woos me;
God grant ’tis not Cleena the queen that pursues me;
That my soul, lost and lone, has no witchery wrought her,
While I dream of dark groves and O’Donovan’s daughter.”

In the Dinnsenchus there is an ancient poetical love story, of which Cleena is the heroine; wherein it is related that she was a foreigner, and that she was drowned in the harbour of Glandore, near Skibbereen, in Cork. In this harbour, the sea, at certain times, utters a very peculiar, deep, hollow, and melancholy roar among the caverns of the cliffs; and this surge has been from time immemorial called Tonn-Cleena, Cleena’s wave.

Cleena had her palace in the heart of a great rock, situated about five miles south-south-west from Mallow; it is still well known by the name of Carrig-Cleena, and it has given name to two townlands. Another of her haunts—a rock of the same name—is situated in the townland of Reenogrena, in the parish of Kilfaughnabeg, in the same county.

Aeibhell [Eevil], or more correctly Oebhinn [Eevin], whose name signifies “beautiful,” was another powerful banshee, and presided over north Munster: she was in an especial manner the guardian spirit of the Dalcassians. Before the battle of Clontarf, she threw a magical cloak round the Dalcassian hero, Dunlang O’Hartigan, which rendered him invisible. And towards evening, as the confusion of the battle increased, when Brian’s attendant urged him to mount his horse and retire from the danger, he answered:—“Retreat becomes us not, and I know that I shall not leave this place alive. For Aeibhell of Craglea came to me last night, and told me that I should be killed this day” (see Wars of GG., p. 201).

Aeibhell had her palace near Killaloe, in a rock called Craggeevil, but better known by the name of Craglea, grey rock, which is also the name of a townland. The rock is situated in a silent glen, under the face of a mountain; and the peasantry affirm that she forsook her retreat, when the woods which once covered the place were cut down. There is a spring in the face of the mountain, still called Tobereevil, Aeibhell's well.

There is a legend common over all Ireland, connected generally with lakes, that there lives at the bottom, a monstrous serpent or dragon, chained there by a superior power. The imprisonment of these demoniac monsters is commonly attributed to St. Patrick, who, when he cleared the country of demons, chose this mode of disposing of some of the most ferocious:—and there they must remain till the day of judgment. In some places it is said that they are permitted to appear above the waters at certain times, generally every seven years; and then the inhabitants hear the clanking of chains, or other unearthly noises.

During the period of St. Patrick's sojourn in Connaught, he retired on the approach of Lent to the mountain of Croaghpatrick, and there spent some time in fasting and prayer. To this historical fact has been added a fabulous relation, which Jocelin in his Life of St. Patrick, written in the twelfth century, appears to have been the first to promulgate, but which is now one of Ireland's most celebrated legends; namely, that the saint brought together on the top of the mountain all the serpents and venomous creatures, and demons of Ireland, and drove them into the sea. There is a deep hollow on the northern face of the mountain, called to this day Lugnademon, the hollow of the demons, into which they all retreated on their way to final banishment.

This story, however, is not found in the early authentic lives of the saint; and that it is a comparatively recent invention is evident from the fact, that Ireland's exemption from reptiles is mentioned by Solinus, who wrote in the third century; and Bede mentions the same fact, but without assigning any cause; whereas, if such a remarkable occurrence had been on record, doubtless he would not fail to notice it.

Legends of aquatic monsters are very ancient among the Irish people. We find one mentioned by Adamnan (Lib. II. cap. 27), as infesting Loch Ness, in Scotland. In the Life of St. Mochua, of Balla, it is related that a stag which was wounded in the chase took refuge in an island in Lough Ree; but that no one dared to follow it, "on account of a horrible monster that infested the lake, and was accustomed to destroy swimmers." A man was at last prevailed on to swim across, "but as he was returning, the beast devoured him." O'Flaherty (Iar Connaught, c. 19) has a very circumstantial story of an "Irish crocodil," that lived at the bottom of Lough Mask; and in O'Clery's Calendar (p. 145) we read about the upper lake of Glendalough:—"They say that the lake drains in its middle, and that a frightful serpent is seen in it, and that from fear of it no one ever durst swim in the lake."

This legend assumes various forms in individual cases, and many are the tales the people can relate of fearful encounters with a monster covered with long hair and a mane: moreover, they are occasionally met with in old castles, lisses, caves, &c., as well as in lakes. The word by which they are most commonly designated is piast, cognate with Lat. bestia, Eng. beast; several lakes in different parts of the country are called Loughnapiast, or, more correctly, Loch-na-peiste, each of which is inhabited by a demoniacal serpent; and in a river in the parish of Banagher, Derry, there is a spot called Lig-na-peiste, which is the abode of another.

When St. Patrick was journeying westward, a number of them attempted to oppose his progress at a place in the parish of Ardcarne, in Roscommon, which is called to this day Knocknabeast; or, in Irish, Cnoc-na-bpiast, the hill of the serpents. In the parish of Drumhome, in Donegal, stands a fort which gives name to a townland called Lisnapaste; there is another with a similar name in the townland of Gullane, parish of Kilconly, Kerry, in which the people say a serpent used to be seen; and near Freshford, in Kilkenny, is a well called Tobernapeasta, from which a townland takes its name.

Sometimes the name indicates directly their supernatural and infernal character; as, for instance, in Pouladown, near Watergrasshill, in Cork, i. e. Poll-a'-deamhain, the demon's hole. There is a pool in the townland of Killarah, parish of Kildallan, Cavan, three miles from Ballyconnell, called Loughandoul, or, in Irish, Loch-an-diabhail, the lake of the devil; and Deune Castle, in the parish of Kilconly, in Kerry, is the demon's castle, which is the signification of its Irish name, Caislen-a'-deamhain.

CHAPTER VI.

CUSTOMS, AMUSEMENTS, OCCUPATIONS.

THE pagan Irish divided their year, in the first instance, into two equal parts, each of which was afterwards subdivided into two parts or quarters. The four quarters were called Earrach, Samhradh, Foghmhar, and Geimhridh [Arragh, Sowra, Fowar, Gevrë]; Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter, which are the names still in use; and they began on the first days of February, May, August, and November, respectively. We have historical testimony that games were celebrated at the beginning of Summer, Autumn, and Winter; and it may be reasonably inferred that Spring was also ushered in by some sort of festivity.

The first day of May, which was the beginning of the summer half year, was called Bealltaine [Beltany]; it is still the name always used by those speaking Irish, and it is well known in Scotland, where Beltane has almost taken its place as an English word:—

“Ours is no sapling, chance sown by the fountain, Blooming at Beltane, in winter to fade.”

Tuathal [Thoohal] the Acceptable, king of Ireland in the first century, instituted the feast of Bealltaine at Uisneach, now the hill of Usnagh, in Westmeath, where, ever after, the pagan Irish celebrated their festivities, and lighted their Druidic fires on the first of May; and from these fires, according to Cormac's Glossary, the festival derived its name:—“Belldaine, i. e. bil-tene, i. e. tene-bil, i. e. the goodly fire, i. e. two goodly fires which the Druids were used to make, with great incantations on them, and they used to bring the cattle between them against the diseases of each year."

While Usnagh was regarded as the chief centre of these rites, there were similar observances on the same day in other parts of Ireland; for Keating informs us that "upon this occasion, they were used to kindle two fires in every territory in the kingdom, in honour of the pagan god." Down to a very recent period these fires were lighted, and the May-day games celebrated both in Ireland and Scotland; and even at this day in many remote districts, some relics of the old druidic fire superstitions of May morning, still linger among the peasantry.*

The May-day festivities must have been formerly celebrated with unusual solemnity, and for a long succession of generations, at all those places now called Beltany, which is merely the anglicised form of Bealltaine. There are two of them in Donegal—one near Raphoe, and the other in the parish of Tulloghobegly; there is one also near Clogher, in Tyrone, and another in the parish of Cappagh, in the same county. In the parish of Kilmore, Armagh, we find Tamnaghvelton, the field of the Beltaine sports; and in Lisbalting, in the parish of Kilcash, Tipperary, the old lis where the festivities were carried on is still to be seen.

One of the Tuatha De Danann kings, Lewy of the long hand, established a fair or gathering of the people, to be held yearly on the first day of August, at a place on the Blackwater in Meath, between Navan and Kells; in which various games and pastimes, as well as marriages, were celebrated, and which were continued down to times comparatively recent. This fair was instituted by Lewy in commemoration of his foster-mother Taillte, who was daughter of the king of Spain; and in honour of her he called the place Tailltenn (Taillte, gen. Tailltenn), which is the present Irish name, but corrupted in English to Teltown.

* See Wildes's Irish Popular Superstitions; Petrie's Round Towers; and O'Donovan's Introduction to the Book of Rights.

The place still exhibits the remains of raths and artificial lakes; and according to tradition, marriages were celebrated in one particular hollow, which is still called Lag-an-aonaigh [Laganeany, the hollow of the fair]. Moreover, the Irish-speaking people all over Ireland still call the first of August Lugh-Nasadh, i. e. Lewy's fair.

The first of November was called Samhuin [savin, or sowan], which is commonly explained samh-fhuin, i. e. the end of samh, or summer; and, like Belltaine, it was a day devoted by the pagan Irish to religious and festive ceremonies. Tuathal also instituted the feast of Samhuin (as well as that of Belltaine—see p. 186); and it was celebrated on that day at Tlachtga, now the hill of Ward near Athboy, in Meath, where fires were lighted, and games and sports carried on. It was also on this day that the Feis, or convention of Tara was held; and the festivities were kept up three days before and three days after Samhuin. These primitive celebrations have descended through eighteen centuries; and even at the present time, on the eve of the first of November, the people of this country practise many observances which are undoubted relics of ancient pagan ceremonies.

While the great festival established by Tuathal was celebrated at Tlachtga, minor festivities were, as in case of the Belltaine, observed on the same day in different places through the country; and in several of these the name of Samhuin has remained as a perpetual memorial of those bygone pastimes. Such a place is Knocksouna, near Kilmallock, in Limerick. The Four Masters, who mention it several times, call it Samhuin—a name exactly analogous to Beltany; while in the Life of St. Fionnchu, in the Book of Lismore, it is called Cnoc-Samhna, the hill of Samhuin, which is exactly represented in pronunciation by Knocksouna. According to this last authority, the hill was more anciently called Ard-na-rioghraidhe [reery], the hill of the kings; from all which we may infer that it was anciently a place of great notoriety. In the parish of Kiltoghert, county Leitrim, there is a place with a name having the same signification, viz., Knocknasawna.

It would appear from the preceding names, as well as from those that follow, that these meetings were usually held on hills; and this was done no doubt in imitation of the original festival; for Tlachtga, or the hill of Ward, though not high, is very conspicuous over the flat plains of Meath. Drumhawan, near Ballybay, in Monaghan, represents the Irish Druim-Shamhuin, the ridge of Samhuin; and in the parish of Donaghmoyne, in the same county, is another place called Drumhamon, which is the same name, for it is written Drumhaven in an old map of 1777; in the parish of Kilcronaghan, Londonderry, we find a place called Drumsamny, and the original pronunciation is very well preserved in Drumsawna, in the parish of Magheraculmoney, Fermanagh. Carrickhawna [Carrick, a rock], is found in the parish of Toomour, in Sligo; and Gurteenasowna (Gurteen a little field), near Dunmanway, in Cork.

An assembly of the people, convened for any purpose whatever, was anciently called aenach; and it would appear that these assemblies were often held at the great regal cemeteries. For, first, the names of many of the cemeteries begin with the word aenach, as Aenach-Chruachain, Aenach-Tailltenn, Aenach-in-Broga, &c.; and it is said in the "History of the Cemeteries," (Petrie, R. Towers, p. 106), that "There are fifty hills [burial mounds] at each Aenach of these." Secondly, the double purpose is shown very clearly in the accounts of the origin of Carn-Amhalgaidh [Awly] near Killala:—"Carn-Amhalgaidh, i. e. of Amhalgaidh, son of Fiachra Ealgach, son of Dathi, son of Fiachra. It was by him that this carn was formed, for the purpose of holding a meeting (aenach) of the Hy Amhalgaidh around it every year, and to view his ships and fleets going and coming, and as a place of interment for himself." (Book of Lecan, cited in Petrie's R. Towers, p. 107. See p. 129 supra.)

In modern times, and in the present spoken language, the word aenach is always applied to a cattle fair. It is pretty certain that in some cases the present cattle fairs are the representatives of the ancient popular assemblies; which have continued uninterruptedly from age to age, gradually changing their purposes to suit the requirements of each succeeding generation. This we find in the case of Nenagh, in Tipperary, which is still celebrated for its great fairs. Its most ancient name was Aenach-Thetċ; and it was afterwards called Aenach-Urmhumhan [Urwooan], the assembly or assembly-place of Ormond, which indicates that it was at one time the chief meeting place for the tribes of east Munster. The present name is formed by the attraction of the article 'n to Aenach, viz., nAenach, i. e. the fair, which is exactly represented in pronunciation by Nenagh (see p. 22).

This word forms a part of a great number of names, and in every case it indicates that a fair was formerly held in the place, though in most instances they have been long discontinued, or transferred to other localities. The usual forms in modern names are -eany, -eeny, -eena, -enagh, and in Cork and Kerry, -eanig. Monasteranenagh in Limerick, where the fine ruins of the monastery founded by the king of Thomond in the twelfth century, still remain, is called by the Four Masters, Mainister-an-aonaigh, the monastery of the fair. But the fair was held there long before the foundation of the monastery, and down to that time the place was called Aenach-beag (Four Masters), i. e. little fair, probably to distinguish it from the great fair of Nenagh.

The simple word Enagh is the name of about twenty townlands in different counties, extending from Antrim to Cork; but in some cases, especially in Ulster, this word may represent eanach a marsh. The Irish name for Enagh, in the parish of Clonlea, county Clare, is Aenach-O'bhFloinn, the fair of the O'Flynn's.

Ballinenagh is the name of a place near Newcastle, in Limerick, and of another in Tipperary, while the form Ballineanig is found in Kerry, and Ballynenagh in Londonderry—all meaning the town of the fair; Ardaneanig (ard, a height), is a place near Killarney; and in Cork and Sligo we find Lissaneena and Lissaneeny, the fort of the fair. The plural of aenach is aentaigh; and this is well represented in pronunciation by Eanty (-beg and -more), in the parish of Kilcorney, in Clare.*

In the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, we have an interesting notice of one of the ancient tribe assemblies. In the saint's progress through Connaught, he visited the assembly place of the tribe of Amhalgaidh (brother of Dathi: see p. 129), and preached to a very great multitude; and on that occasion he converted and baptized the seven sons of Amhalgaidh, and 12,000 persons. This place was called Forrach-mac-nAmhalgaidh [Forragh-mac-nawly], i. e. the assembly place of Amhalgaidh's clann; the word Forrach, which Tirechan Latinizes Forrgea, signifying the piece of ground on which a tribe were accustomed to hold their meetings. According to O'Donovan, this name survives, and preserves the identity of this interesting spot. About a mile and a half south-west from Killala, there are two townlands, adjoining one another, one called Farragh, which is little changed from the old form Forrach, as given in the Tripartite Life; and the other—which is on a hill—called Mullafarry, i. e. Mullach-Forraigh, the hill of the meeting place. There is also a hill in the same neighbourhood, called Knockatinnoe, Cnoc-a'-tionóil, the hill of the assembly, which commemorates gatherings of some kind; but whether in connexion with the meetings at Farragh, or not, it is hard to say, for it lies about five miles distant to the south-east, on the shore of the Moy.

* See Mr. W. M. Hennessy's paper "On the Curragh of Kildare," for much valuable information on the subject of the ancient aenachs.

The word Forrach or Farrach was employed to designate meeting places in other parts of Ireland also; and we may be pretty sure that this was the origin of such names as Farragh in the parishes of Denn and Kilmore, in Cavan; Farra, in the parish of Drumcree, Armagh; Farrow, in Westmeath and Leitrim; Fary, in Wexford; Furrow, near Mitchelstown, in Cork; Gortnafurra, in the vale of Aherlow, in Tipperary, the field of the assembly place; Farraghroe, in Longford, and Forramoyle, in Galway, the red, and the bald or bare, meeting place.

Nás [nawce] is a word of similar acceptation to aenach; Cormac's Glossary explains it a fair or meeting place. This term is not often used, but there is one place celebrated in former ages, to which it has given name, viz., Naas, in Kildare. It was the most ancient residence of the kings of Leinster; having been founded, according to bardic history, by Lewy of the long hand, who also founded Tailltenn, in Meath (see p. 187); it continued to be used as a royal residence till the tenth century; and the great mound of the palace still remains, just outside the town. This word is also found in a few other names, all in Leinster; such as Nash, in the parish of Owenduff, Wexford, which is still a fair green; and Ballynaas, in the parish of Rathmacnee in the same county.

The word sluagh [sloo], usually translated host, signifies any multitude, but in the annals, it is commonly applied to an army: it occurs in the Zeuss MSS., where it glosses agmen, i. e. a host on march.

This word forms a part of the names of several places, where great numbers of people must have been formerly in the habit of congregating, for some purpose. One of the best known is Ballinasloe, on the Galway side of the river Suck. Its Irish name, as used by the Four Masters, is Bel-atha-na-sluaigheadh [Bellanaslooa], the ford-mouth of the hosts; and it is very probable that these gatherings, whatever may have been their original purpose, are represented by the present great horse fairs.

Very often the s is replaced by t, by eclipse (see p. 22). Srahatloe, in the parish of Aghagower, Mayo, is an instance, the Irish name being Srath-a'-tsluaigh, the river-holm of the host. So also Tullintloy, in Leitrim; Knockatloe, in Clare, and Knockatlowig, near Castle-ventry, in Cork, all signifying the hill of the host.

Meetings or meeting places are sometimes designated by the word pobul, which signifies people. This is not, as might be supposed from its resemblance to the English word, of modern introduction; for it occurs in the most ancient Irish MSS., as for instance in those of Zeuss, where it glosses populus. It is often used to denote a congregation, and from this it is sometimes employed in the sense of "parish;" but its primary sense seems to be people simply, without any reference to assemblies.

The barony of Pubblebrien, in Limerick, is called in Irish Pobul-wi-Bhriain, O'Brien's people, for it was the patrimony of the O'Briens; and on the confines of Limerick, Cork, and Kerry, is an extensive wild district, well known by the name of Pobble O'Keeffe, O'Keeffe's people.

There is a townland near Enniskillen, containing the remains of an old church, and another near Ardstraw, in Tyrone, both called Pubble, i. e. a congregation or parish. And the word occurs in combination in Skephubble, near Finglas, in Dublin, the bush of the congregation; Lispopple, in Dublin, and Westmeath (lis a fort); and Reanabobul, in the parish of Ballyvourney, Cork, Reidh-na-bpobul, the mountain-flat of the congregations.

So far as conclusions may be drawn from the evidence of local names, we must believe that the pastime meetings of the peasantry were much more common formerly than now. In every part of the country, names are found that tell of those long forgotten joyous assemblies; and it is interesting to note the various contrivances adopted in their formation.

The word bouchail [boohil], a boy, is of frequent occurrence in such names; for example, Knockannamo-hilly, in the parish of Youghalarra, Tipperary, in Irish Cnocan-na-mbouchaillidhe, the hill of the boys, indicates the spot where young men used to assemble to amuse themselves; and with the same signification is Knocknamohill in the parish of Castlemacadam, Wicklow; Knocknabohilly, the name of a place near Cork city, and of another, near Kinsale; and Knockanenabohilly, in the parish of Kilcrumper, Cork — the two last names being less correctly anglicised than the others. We find names of similar import in the north: Edenamohill is a townland in the parish of Donaghmore, Donegal; and there is another place of the same name in the parish of Magheraculmoney, in Fermanagh, both anglicised from Eudan-na-mbouchail, the hill-brow of the boys; and Ardnamoghill (ard, a height), is the name of a place in the parish of Killea, Donegal.

Sometimes the same idea is expressed by the word óg [oge], which literally signifies young, but is often applied to a young person. Tullyhog, or Tullaghoge, the inauguration place of the O'Neills—now a small village, three miles from Stewartstown, in Tyrone—is very often mentioned in the annals, always by the name of Tulach-óg, the hill of the youths; and the name would seem to indicate that the place was used for the celebration of games, as well as for the inauguration of the chieftains. In Tipperary we find Glennanoge and Ballaghoge, the glen and the road of the youths. The synonymous term óglach occurs in Coolnanoglagh, in the parish of Monagay, Limerick, the hill-back of the young persons; while in the parish of Grange, Armagh, we find Ballygassoon, the town of the gossoons (young boys), or, in the Munster dialect, gorsoons.

Other terms are employed to designate the places of these meetings, which will be understood from a few examples. There can be little doubt that Bally-sugagh, near Saul, in Down, has its name from some such merry makings; for its name, Baile-sugach, merry-town, indicates as much. Knockaunavogga, in the parish of Bourney, Tipperary, shows a similar origin, as is seen by its Irish name, Cnocan-a'-mhagaidh, the hill of the joking or pleasantry; and this termination is found in many other names, such as Ardavagga (ard, a height), in the parish of Kilmurry-ely, King's County; and Cashlaunawogga, the castle of the merriment, a ruined fortress, near Kilfenora, in Clare. So also Knockannavlyman, in the parish of Ballingarry, Limerick, Cnocan-a'-bhlahd-mainn, the hill of the boasting; Ardingary, near Letterkenny, which the Four Masters call Ard-an-ghaire, the hill of the shouting or laughter; Knocknaclogha, near Pomeroy, in Tyrone, the seat of Macdonnell, the commander of O'Neill's galloglasses, Cnoc-an-chluiche (Four Masters), the hill of the game. Not unfrequently the same idea is expressed by the word diomhaoin [deeveen], which signifies idle or vain—a term imposed, we may be sure, by wise old people, who looked upon these pastime meetings as mere idleness and vanity. We see this in such names as Drumdeevin, near Kilmacrenan, in Donegal, and Dromdeeveen, west of Dromcolliher, in Limerick, both signifying idle ridge; Coomdeeween, in Kerry (coom, a hollow); Tievedeevan, in Donegal, idle hill-side.

By an examination of local names, we are enabled not only to point out the spots where the peasant assemblies were held, but also often to get a glimpse of the nature of the amusements. Dancing has from time immemorial been a favourite recreation with our peasantry; and numbers of places have taken their names from the circumstance that the young people of the neighbourhood were accustomed to meet there in the summer evenings, to forget in the dance the fatigue of the day's labour.

The word for dance is rince or rinceadh [rinka]; and it is curious that, of all the Indo-European languages, the Irish and Sanscrit have alone preserved the word, and that with little change, the Sansc. rinkha being almost identical with the Irish.

Those who have visited the great cave near Mitchelstown, county Cork, will remember the name of the townland in which it is situated—Skeheenarinky, or in Irish Sceithín-a'-rinceadh, the little bush of the dancing; the bush no doubt marking the trysting place, under which sat the musician, surrounded by the merry juveniles. And a large stone must have served a similar purpose in Clogharinky, in the parish of Muckalee, Kilkenny. A mill is generally a place of amusement; and that it was sometimes selected for dance meetings, we see by Mullenaranky, in the parish of Lisronagh, in Tipperary. A merry place must have been Ballinrink, in the parish of Killeagh, Meath, since it deserved the name of dancing town.

When deer roamed wild through every forest, when wild boars and wolves lurked in the glens and mountain gorges, and various other beasts of chase swarmed on the hills and plains, hunting must have been to the people both an amusement and a necessary occupation. Our forefathers, like most ancient people, were passionately fond of the chase; and our old tales and romances abound in descriptions of its pleasures and dangers, and of the prowess and adventures of the hunters. That they sometimes had certain favourite spots for this kind of sport, we have sufficient proof in such names as Drumnashalogue, in the parish of Clonfeacle, Tyrone; and Drumashellig, near Ballyroan, in Queen's County, in Irish Druim-na-sealg, the ridge of the chase. The word sealg [shallog], hunting, occurs in many other names, and, as it varies little in form, it is always easy to recognise it. Derrynashallog (Derry, an oak wood) is in the parish of Donagh, in Monaghan; and Ballynashallog, the town of the hunting, lies near the city of Londonderry.

The very spot where the huntsman wound his horn, to collect his dogs and companions, is often identified by such names as Tullynahearka, near Aughrim, in Roscommon, Tulaigh-na-hadhairce, the hill of the horn; and, with the same meaning, Ardinawark, at the entrance to the Gap of Barnesmore, near Donegal; Killeenerk, in Westmeath (Killeen, a little wood), and Drumnaheark, in Donegal (Drum, a ridge); Knockerk near Slane, in Meath, and Lisnahirka, in Roscommon, the hill and the fort of the horn.

Another favourite athletic exercise among the ancient Irish, and which we find very often mentioned in old tales, was hurling; and those who remember the eagerness with which it was practised in many parts of Ireland twenty-five years ago, can well attest that it had not declined in popularity. Down to a very recent period, it was carried on with great spirit and vigour in the Phoenix Park, Dublin, where the men of Meath contended every year against the men of Kildare; and it still continues, though less generally than formerly, to be a favourite pastime among the people.

The hurley or curved stick with which the ball was struck, corresponding with the bat in cricket, is called in Irish comán, signifying literally a little crooked stick, from com or cam, curved. It is by this word that the game itself is commonly designated; and it is called coman in most parts of Ireland, even by the English-speaking people. It forms a part of several names, but the initial c is commonly made g by eclipse (see p. 21); and in every case it serves to identify the places where the game was played. Aughnagomaun, in the parish of Ballysheehan, Tipperary, is written in Irish Achadh-na-gcoman, the hurling field; and there is a townland near Belfast called Ballygammon, which, as it is written Ballygoman in a grant of James I., obviously represents Baile-na-gcoman, the town of the hurling.

Look-out points, whether on the coast to command the sea, or on the borders of a hostile territory to guard against surprise, or in the midst of a pastoral country to watch the flocks, are usually designated by the word coimhead [covade]. This word signifies watching or guarding, and it is generally applied to hills from which there is an extensive prospect. Mullycovet and Mullykivet, in Fermanagh, must have been used for this purpose, for they are both modern forms of Mullaigh-coimheada, the hill of the watching; and Glencovet, the name of a townland in Donegal, and of another near Enniskillen, and Drumcovit, in Derry, have a similar origin. Sometimes the m is fully pronounced, and this is generally the case in the south, and occasionally in the north; as in Cloontycommade, near Kanturk, in Cork, Cluain-tighe-coimheada, the meadow of the watching house; and Slieve Commedagh, a high mountain in the parish of Kilcoo, Down, the mountain of the watching.

The compound Deagh-choimhead signifies "a good reconnoitering station" (deagh, good); and it gives name to Deehommed or Decomet, in Down, Deecho-made, in Sligo, to Dehomad, in Clare, and a few other places.

In old Irish writings these reconnoitering stations are often mentioned. For instance, in the ancient tale of the Battle of Moyrath, Congal Claen speaks to the druid, Dubhdiadh:—" 'Thou art to go therefore from me, to view and reconnoitre the men of Erin [i. e., the Irish army under king Dombnall]; and it shall be according to thy account and description of the chiefs of the west, that I will array my battalions, and arrange my forces.' Then Dubhdiadh went to Ard-na-hiomfhairccse [Ard-na-himarksha, i. e. the hill of the reconnoitering], and from it he took his view." (p. 179).

Elevated stations that command an extensive view, often received names formed from the word radhare [ryark, in the south; rayark, or rawark, in the north]. The Mullaghareirk mountains lie to the south-east of Abbeyfeale, in Limerick, and the name Mullach-a-radharc signifies the summit of the prospect. The same word is found in Lisarearke, in the parish of Currin, Monaghan (Lis, a fort); and in Knockanaryark, two miles east of Kenmare, prospect hill. There is a residence near Dalkey, in Dublin, with the name Rarkanillan, which represents the Irish Radharc-an-oileain, the view of the Island, i. e., Dalkey island.

In an early stage of society in every country, signal or beacon fires were in common use, either for the guidance of travellers or to alarm the country in any sudden emergency. Fires were lighted also on certain festival days, as I have stated (p. 186); and those lighted on the eve of St. John, the 24th of June, are continued to the present day through the greater part of Ireland. The tradition is that the May-day festival was transferred by St. Patrick to the 24th of June, in honor of St. John, but for this we have no written authority. The spots where signal or festival fires used to be lighted, are still, in many cases, indicated by the names, though in almost all these places the custom has, for ages, fallen into disuse. The words employed are usually teine and solas [tinně, sullus].

Teine is the general word for fire, and in modern names it is usually found forming the termination tinny. It is found in Kiltinny, near Coleraine, the wood of the fire; Duntinny, in Donegal (dun, a fort); Mullaghtinny, near Clogher, in Tyrone, the summit of the fire. Tennyphobble, near Granard, in Longford, Teine-phobail, the fire of the parish or congregation, plainly indicates some festive assembly round a fire. Cloghaunnatinny, in the parish of Kilmurry, Clare, was anciently, and is still called in Irish, Clochán-bile-teine, the stepping stones of the fire tree, from a large tree which grew near the crossing, under which May fires used to be lighted. These fires were no doubt often lighted under trees, for the Four Masters mention a place called Bile-teineadh, the old tree of the fire; which O'Donovan identifies with the place near Moynalty, in Meath, now called in Irish, Coill-a'-bhile, the wood of the bilē, or old tree, and in English, Billywood.

The plural of teine is teinte [tintě], and this is also of frequent occurrence in names, as in Clontinty, near Glanworth, Cork, the meadow of the fires; Mollynadinta, in the parish of Rossinver, Leitrim; Mullaigh-na-dteinte, the summit of the fires. This word, with the English plural added (p. 31), gives name to Tents (i. e. fires), three townlands in Cavan, Fermanagh, and Leitrim; and the English is substituted for the Irish plural in Tennies, in Valentia island. The diminutive is found in Clontinteen, in Westmeath, and in Tullantintin, in Cavan, the meadow and the hill of the little fire.

Solas is the word in general use for light in the modern spoken language; there is another form, soillse, which is found in the Zeuss MSS., where it glosses lumen (Zeuss, Gram. Celt. p. 257); and though this form does not, as far as I am aware, occur in the modern language, there is a diminutive soillseán [sile-shaun], which is often found in local names. Solas gives name to Ardsollus, the hill of light, in Clare; in Antrim there is a place called Drumnasole, the ridge of the lights; Sollus itself is the name of a townland in Tyrone; and there are three townlands in the same county, called Ballynasollus; while we find Rossolus in Monaghan, and Rostollus, in Galway (see p. 22), the wood or the promontory of light.

There are similar names formed from soillseán; as for instance, Mullaghselsana, in the parish of Errigal Trough, Monaghan, the hill of the illuminations; and Corhelshinagh, in the same county, the round hill of the fires. And Sileshaun, the name of a place in the parish of Inagh, Clare, exactly represents the pronunciation of the word.

In former days, when roads were few and bridges still fewer, a long journey was an undertaking always arduous, and generally uncertain and dangerous. Rivers were crossed by fords, and to be able to strike exactly on the fordable point, was to the traveller always important; while at night, especially on a dark, wet, and stormy night, it became not unfrequently a matter of life or death. To keep a light of some kind burning on the spot would suggest itself as the most natural and effectual plan for directing travellers, and except in a state of society downright barbarous, it is scarcely conceivable that some such expedient would not at least occasionally be adopted.

The particular kind of light employed, it would now probably, be vain to speculate; a taper or splinter of bogwood in a window pane, if a house lay near, a lantern hung on the bough of a tree, a blaze of dried furze or ferns kept up till the expected arrival—some or all of these we may suppose would be adopted, according to circumstances. That this custom existed appears to be sufficiently proved by this fact, that many fords—now generally spanned by bridges—in different parts of Ireland still go by the name of Ath-solais, the ford of the light, variously modernized according to locality; and some of them have given names to townlands.

A ford on the river Aubeg, three miles east of Kanturk, in Cork, has given name to the townland of Assolus; there is a ford of the same name, where the road from Bunlahy, in Longford, to Scrabby, crosses a little creek of Lough Gowna; and several small streams in different parts of the country have names of this kind, from a ford somewhere on their course—one for instance, called Aughsullish, in the parish of Doon, Tipperary. The name of Lightford bridge, two miles south-east from Castlebar, is a translation from the Irish name which is still used, Ath-a'-solais. There is a ford on the river Swilly, two miles west of Letterkenny, which, judging from its position and its being defended by a castle, as well as from its frequent mention in the annals, must have been in former days one of the principal passes across the river; and as such, was, no doubt, often signalled by lights. The Four Masters write the name Scairbh-sholais, the scariff or shallow ford of the light; it is now called Scarriffhollis, and the castle, which has disappeared, was called Castlehollis.

Places of execution have been at all times, and in all countries, regarded by the people with feelings of awe and detestation ; and even after the discontinuance of the practice, the traditions of the place preserve the memory of it from one generation to another. A name indicative of the custom is almost certain to fix itself on the spot, of which we have instances in the usual English names Gallows-hill, Gallows-green, &c., and such names, from the peculiarity of their history, retain their hold, when many others of less impressive signification, vanish from the face of the country.

Several terms are used in Ireland to denote such places, the principal of which are the following :—Croch signifies literally a cross, but is almost always understood to mean a cross as an instrument of execution, or a gallows. It is of long standing in the language, and is either cognate with or borrowed from the Latin cruz, which it glosses in the Zeuss MSS. We find it in Knocknacrohy, the name of three townlands in Limerick, Kerry, and Waterford, in Irish Cnoc-na-croiche, the hill of the gallows ; and in Ard-nacrohy, in Limerick, with the same meaning. The instrument of death must have been erected in an ancient fort, in Ranacrohy, in Tipperary. The word often takes the forms of crehy and creha in modern names, as in Cappanacreha (Cappa, a plot of ground), in Galway ; and Raheenacrehy, near Trim, in Meath, the little fort of the gallows.

Crochaire [crohera] signifies a hangman, and it is in still more frequent use in the formation of names than croch, usually in the forms croghery and croghera. Knockcroghery, the hangman's hill, is a village in Roscommon, where there is a station on the Midland railway ; and there are places of the same name in Cork and Mayo. Mullaghcroghery, with a similar meaning, occurs three times in Monaghan; and in Cork Glenacroghery, and Ardnagroghery, Ard-na-gcrochaire (p. 21), the hill of the hangman.

Sealán [shallan] signifies the rope used by an executioner; and it is sometimes used to designate the place where people were hanged. It gives name to Shallon, a townland near Finglas, in Dublin; there is another place of the same name near Swords, and a third near Julianstown, in Meath. Shallany, in the parish of Derryvullen, Fermanagh, is the same name slightly altered; and Drumshallon, in Louth and Armagh, signifies the ridge of the gallows.

There is another mode of designating places of execution, from which it appears that criminals were often put to death by decapitation; an inference which is corroborated by various passages in Irish authorities. Names of this kind are formed on the Irish word ceann, a head, which is placed in the end of words in the genitive plural, generally taking the forms nagin, nagan, &c.

Knocknagin is the name of a place near Balrothery, Dublin, and of another in the parish of Desertmartin, Derry, which is in Irish Cnoc-na-gceann, the hill of the heads; while the termination is modified in accordance with the Munster pronunciation in Knocknagown in Cork, and in Knockaunnagown in Waterford, both having the same meaning. Loughnagin occurs in Donegal, and Gortinagin, the little field of the heads, in the parish of Cappagh, Tyrone.

In a state of society when war was regarded as the most noble of all professions, and before the invention of gunpowder, those who manufactured swords and spears were naturally looked upon as very important personages. In Ireland they were held in great estimation; and in the historical and legendary tales, we find the smith was often a powerful chieftain, who made arms for himself and his relations. We know that Vulcan was one of the most powerful of the Grecian gods, and the ancient Irish had their Goban, the Tuath De Danann smith-god, who figures in many of the ancient romances.

The land possessed by smiths, or the places where they resided, may in many cases be determined by the local names. Gobha [gow] is a smith: the usual genitive form is gobhan [gown], but it is often the same as the nominative; and both forms are reproduced in names, the former being commonly made gowan or gown, and the latter gow. Both terminations are very common, and may be generally translated "of the smith," or if it be nagowan, "of the smiths."

Ballygowan, Ballygow, and Ballingown, the town of the smith, are the names of numerous places through the four provinces; and there are several townlands in Ulster and Munster called Ballynagown, the town of the smiths. Occasionally the Irish genitive plural is made goibhne, which in the west of Ireland is anglicised guivnia, givna, &c.; as in Carrownaguivna, and Ardgivna in Sligo, the quarter-land, and the height, of the smiths.

Sometimes the genitive singular is made goe or go in English; as we find in Athgoe, near Newcastle, in Dublin, the smith's ford; Kinego, in Tyrone and Donegal, the smith's head or hill; Ednego, near Dromore, in Down, the hill brow of the smith. It takes a different form in Clongowes, in Kildare, the smith's meadow, where there is now a Roman Catholic college—the same name as Cloongowan, in Cork.

Ceard signifies an artificer of any kind; it occurs in the Zeuss MSS., in the form of cerd or cert, and glosses aerarius. In Scotland, it has held its place as a living word, even among speakers of English, but it is applied to a tinker:—"Her charms had struck a sturdy caird, As weel as poor gut scraper."—(Burns).

It usually enters into names with the c eclipsed (p. 21), forming the termination nagarde or nagard, "of the artificers." Thus there are several places in Antrim, Derry, Limerick, and Clare, called Ballynagarde, in Irish Baile-na-gceard, the town of the artificers; the same name is corrupted to Ballynacaird, in the parish of Racavan, in Antrim, and to Ballynacard, in King's county. Castlegarde and Gortnagarde, in Limerick, the castle, and the field of the artificers.

Cearda or ceardcha denotes a workshop of any kind, but it is now generally applied to a forge: old Irish cerddchae, officina (Zeuss). It enters, very often into names as a termination under several forms, indicating the spots where forges formerly stood. It is very often contracted to cart, as in Coolnacart in Monaghan, which would be correctly written in Irish Cul-na-ceardcha, the hill-back of the forge. A final n is often added, in accordance with the fifth declension; as in Coolnacartan, in Queen's county, the same name as the last; Ballycarton, in Derry; Mullaghcarton, in Antrim (mullach, a summit); Shronacarton and Rathnacarton in Cork, the nose or point, and the fort, of the forge. Other forms are exhibited in Farranacardy, in Sligo, forge land; and Tullynagardy, near Newtownardes, in Down, Tulaigh-na-gceardcha, the hill of the forges.

Saer, a builder or carpenter, appears in modern names generally in the form seer; as in Rathnaseer, in Limerick, the fort of the carpenters; Derrynaseer (Derry, an oakwood), the name of several townlands in Leitrim, and the Ulster counties; Farranseer in Cavan and Londonderry, carpenter's land. Sometimes the s becomes t by eclipse (p. 22); as in Balinteer the name of a place near Dundrum, in Dublin, and of another place in Londonderry, in Irish Baile-an-tsaeir, the town of carpenter or builder.

The ancient Keltic nations navigated their seas and lakes in the currach or hide-covered wicker boat; and it is very probable that it was in fleets of these the Irish made their frequent descents on the coasts of Britain and Gaul. Canoes hollowed out of a single tree were also in extensive use in Ireland, especially on the rivers and lakes, and they are now frequently found buried in lakes and dried-up lake beds.

Cobhlach [cowlagh] means a fleet; but the term was applied to a collection of boats, such as were fitted out for lake or river navigation, as well as to a fleet of ships. In Munster the word is pronounced as if written cobhaltach [cōltagh], and it is preserved according to this pronunciation in the names of several places, the best known of which is Carrigaholt, a village in Clare, at the mouth of the Shannon. The Four Masters write it Carraig-an-chobhlaigh, the rock of the fleet; and the rock from which it took its name rises over the bay where the fleets anchored, and is crowned by the ruins of a castle. The present Irish pronunciation is Carraig-a'-chobhaltaigh (Carrig-ahōlty), which, by the omission of the final syllable, settled into the modern name. Another place of the same name, also well known, and which preserves the correct Irish pronunciation, is Carrigahowly, on Newport bay, in Mayo, the castle of the celebrated Grace O'Malley, the Connaught chieftainess, who paid a visit to Queen Elizabeth. The word, with its Munster pronunciation, appears in Ringacoltig, in Cork harbour, opposite Hawlbowlisland, the point of the fleet.

Most of the various terms employed to designate ships and boats, also find their way into local names. According to the Book of Lecan and other authorities, Ceasair and her people (see p. 150) landed at a place called Dun-na-mbarc, the fortress of the barks or ships, which O'Donovan (Four Mast., vol. i., p. 3) believes is the place now called Dunnamark, near Bantry. Long signifies a ship. According to Cormac's Glossary, it is derived from the Saxon word lang, long; it appears more likely, however, that both the Saxon and Irish words are cognate with the Lat. longus, for we find the Irish word in the Zeuss MSS. (forlongis=navigatione). It occurs occasionally in local names, as in Tralong, near Ross Carbery, in Cork, the strand of the ships; Dunnalong, on the Foyle, five miles south of Derry, the name of which is Irish as it stands, and signifies the fortress of the ships.

Many places take their names from bád, a boat; several of which spots, we may be pretty certain, were ferries, in which a boat was always kept, little or nothing different from the ferries of the present day. Such a place was Rinawade, on the Liffey, near Celbridge, above Dublin—Rinn-a'-bháid, the point of the boat; and Donabate, near Malahide, the church of the boat. And cot, a small boat, is also employed occasionally in the formation of names: from it is derived the name of Annacotty, now a small village on the river Mulkear, east of Limerick, called in Irish Ath-na-coite, the ford of the cot or small boat.

CHAPTER VII.

AGRICULTURE AND PASTURAGE.

THE inhabitants of this country were, from the earliest antiquity, engaged in agriculture and pasturage. In our oldest records we find constant mention of these two occupations; and the clearing of plains is recorded as an event worthy of special notice, in the reigns of many of the early kings.

There are several terms entering into local names, which either indicate directly, or imply, agricultural operations, the enclosure of the land by fences, or its employment as pasture; and to the illustration of those that occur most frequently I will devote the present Chapter.

Ceapach [cappagh] signifies a plot of land laid out for tillage; it is still a living word in Connaught, and is in common use in the formation of names, but it does not occur in Ulster so frequently as in the other provinces. Cappagh and cappa are the most usual anglicised forms; and these, either alone or in combination, give names to numerous places. It has been often asserted, and seems generally believed, that Cappoquin (county Waterford) means "The head of the house of Con;" but this is a mere guess: the name is a plain Irish compound, Ceapach-chuinn, signifying merely Con's plot of land, but no one can tell who this Con was.

Cappawhite, in Tipperary, is called after the family of White; Cappacreen, near Dunboyne, in Meath, withered plot; Cappanageeragh, near Geashill, in King's County, the plot of the sheep; Cappateemore, in Clare, near Limerick city, is in Irish Ceapach-a' tighe-mhoir, the plot of the great house; Cappanalarabaun, in Galway, the plot of the white mare. The word is sometimes made Cappy, which is the name of a townland in Fermanagh; Cappydonnell, in King's county, signifies Donnell's plot. The diminutive Cappog, or Cappoge (little plot), is the name of several places in Ulster, Leinster, and Munster; and another diminutive, Cappeen, occurs three times in Cork.

Garrdha [gara], a garden; usually made garry or garra in modern names. There is a barony in King's county called Garrycastle, containing a townland of the same name (in Reynagh parish), in which was a castle that gave name to both townland and barony. This castle is called in the Annals Garrdha-an-chaislein, the garden of the castle, from which the present name has been formed.

Garry, i. e. the garden, is the name of a place near Ballymoney, in Antrim; and the parish of Myross, west of Glandore, in Cork, is called the Garry, from its fertility compared with the surrounding district. The well-known Garryowen, near Limerick, signifies Owen's garden; Garrysallagh, in Cavan and other counties, dirty garden; Garryvicleheen, near Thurles, in Tipperary, Mac Leheen's garden; Ballingarry, the town of the garden, is the name of a town on the borders of Limerick and Tipperary, and of fourteen townlands. The word Garry begins the names of about ninety townlands, scattered over the four provinces.

Gort, a tilled field: in the Zeuss MSS. it occurs in the form gart, and glosses hortus, and Colgan translates it prædium. It is obviously cognate with Fr. jardin, Sax. geard, Eng. garden, Lat. hortus. It is a very prolific root word, for there are more than 1200 townlands whose names are formed by, or begin with Gort and Gurt, its usual modern forms. Gortnaglogh, or, as it would be written in Irish, Gort-na-gloch, the field of the stones, is the name of a dozen townlands, some of them in each of the four provinces; Gortmillish, in Antrim, sweet field; Gortaganniff, near Adare, in Limerick, the field of the sand; Gortanure and Gortinure, in several counties, the field of the yew. Gorteen, Gortin, and Gurteen (little field), three different forms of the diminutive, are exceedingly common, and are themselves the names of about 100 townlands and villages. The town of Gort, in Galway, is called by the Four Masters Gort-innsi-Guaire, and this is also its present Irish name; it signifies the field of the island of Guary, and it is believed that it took its name from Guairë Aidhne, king of Connaught in the seventh century (see p. 96).

Tamhnach [tawnagh] signifies a green field which produces fresh sweet grass. This word enters very generally into names in Ulster and Connaught, especially in the mountainous districts; it is found occasionally, though seldom, in Leinster, and still more seldom in Munster. In modern names it usually appears as Tawnagh, Tawny, and Tonagh, which are themselves the names of several places; in the north of Ulster the aspirated m is often restored (see p. 40), and the word then becomes Tamnagh and Tamny. In composition it takes all the preceding forms, as well as Tawna and Tamna.

Saintfield, in Down, is a good example of the use of this word. Its old name, which was used to a comparatively late period, and which is still well known, was Tonaghneve, the phonetic representative of Tamhnach-naemh, the field of the saints. There is a townland near the town which still retains the name of Tonaghmore, great field; originally so called to distinguish it from Tonaghneeve.

The forms Tawnagh and Tawna are found in Tawnaghlahan, near Donegal, broad field; Tawnaghaknaff, in the parish of Bohola, Mayo, the fields of the bones, which probably points out the site of a battle; Tawnakeel, near Crossmolina, narrow field. Tawny appears in Tawnyeely, near Mohill, in Leitrim, the field of the lime (Tamhnach-aelaigh); and Tawnybrack, in Antrim, speckled field. Tamnagh and its modifications give names to Tamnaghbane, in Armagh, white field; Tamnaficarbet and Tamnafiglassan, both in Armagh—the first Tamhnach-fidh-carbait, the field of the wood of the chariot, and the second the field of Glassan's wood; Tamnymartin, near Maghera, in Derry, Martin's field.

There is a form Tavnagh, used in some of the Ulster counties, especially in Antrim and Monaghan; such as Tavnaghdrissagh, in Antrim, the field of the briers; Tavanaskea, in Monaghan, the field of the bushes. In composition the t is sometimes aspirated, as in Corhawnagh and Corhawny, the rough field, or the round hill of the field, the names of several places in Cavan and the Connaught counties. Of the few cases that occur in Leinster, the only one I shall mention is Taney, which is the name of the parish that contains the town of Dundrum, near Dublin.

Achadh [agha], a field: translated campulus by Adamnan. It is generally represented in modern names by agha, agh, or augh; but in individual cases the investigator must be careful, for these three words often stand for ath, a ford.

The parish of Agha, in Carlow, takes its name from a very old church ruin, once an important religious foundation, which the Four Masters call Achadharghlais, the field of the green tillage. Aghinver, on Lough Erne, in Fermanagh, is called in the Annals Achadh-inbhir, the field of the inver, or river mouth. Aghamacart, in Queen's County, is in Irish Achadh-mic-Airt, the field of Art's son; Agbindarragh in Tyrone, the field of the oak; Aghawoney, near Kilmacrenan, in Donegal, written by the Four Masters Achadh-mhona, bogfield. Aghintamy, near the town of Monaghan, is in Irish Achadh-an-tsamhaidh, sorrel field; Achonry, in Sligo, is called in the Annals Achadh-Chonaire, Conary's field. Ardagh is the name of numerous villages, townlands, and parishes, through the four provinces; several of these are often mentioned in the annals, the Irish form being always Ard-achadh, high field. In a few cases the modern form is Ardaghy.

Cluain [cloon] is usually translated meadow or lawn; its exact meaning, however, is a fertile piece of land surrounded by bog or marsh, or by a bog on one side, and water on the other.

The word forms a part of a vast number of names in all parts of Ireland; many of the religious establishments derived their names from it; and this has led some writers into the erroneous belief that the word originally meant a place of religious retirement. But it is certain that in its primitive signification it had no reference to religion; and its frequent occurrence in our ecclesiastical names is sufficiently explained by the well-known custom of the early Irish saints, to select lonely and retired places for their own habitations, as well as for their religious establishments.

The names of many of the religious cloons are in fact of pagan origin, and existed before the ecclesiastical foundations, having been adopted without change by the founders:—among these may be reckoned the following. Clones (pronounced in two syllables), in Monaghan, where a round tower remains to attest its former religious celebrity; its name is written in the annals Cluain-Eois, Eos's meadow; and it is not improbable that Eos was the pagan chief who raised the great fort, the existence of which proves it to have been a place of importance before the Christian settlement.

Clonard, in Meath, where the celebrated St. Finian had his great school in the sixth century, is called in all the Irish authorities, Cluain-Eraird, from which the present name has been contracted. Many have translated this "The retirement on the western height;" but this is a mere guess, and at any rate could not be right, for the site of the establishment is a dead flat on the left bank of the Boyne. According to Colgan, Erard was a man's name signifying "noble, exalted or distinguished, and it was formerly not unfrequent among the Irish" (A. SS., p. 28). He then states that this place was so called from some man named Erard, so that Cluain-Eraird or Clonard, signifies Erard's Meadow; and as in case of Clones, a moat still remains there, Erard may have been the pagan chief who erected it, ages before the time of St. Finian. It is worthy of remark that Erard is occasionally met with as a personal name even at the present time. There are several other places in Leinster and Munster, called Clonard and Cloonard, but in these the Irish form of the name is probably Cluainard, high meadow.

We find the names of some of the religious establishments formed by suffixing the name of a saint or some other Christian term to this word cluain; and in these cases, the cluain may be a remnant of the previous pagan name, which was partly changed after the ecclesiastical foundation. Clonallan, now a parish near Newry, in Down, is mentioned by Keating, Colgan, and others, who call it Cluain-Dallain, Dallyan's meadow; the d is omitted by aspiration (see p. 19) in the modern name, but in the Taxation of 1306 it is retained, the place being called Clondalan. It received its name from Dallyan Forgall, who flourished about the year 580; he was a celebrated poet, and composed a panegyric in verse on St. Columba, called Amhra-Choluimcille, of which we possess copies in a very old dialect of the Irish (see Reeves, Eccl. Ant., p. 114).

Except in a very few cases, cluain is represented in the present names by either clon or cloon; and there are about 1800 places in Ireland whose names begin with one or the other of these syllables. Clon is found in the following names:—Clonmellon, in Westmeath, is written by the Four Masters, Cluain-Miláin, Milan's meadow. Clonmel, in Tipperary, they write Cluain-meala, which is the Irish name always used at the present time: this name, which it bore long before the foundation of the town, originated, no doubt, from the abundance of wild bees' nests. There is also a Clonmel near Glasnevin, Dublin, and another in King's county. Clonmult, the meadow of the wethers, is the name of a village and parish in Cork, and of a townland in Cavan.

With cloon are formed Cloontuskert, in Roscommon, which is written in the annals Cluain-tuaisceirt, the northern meadow; Cloonlougher, the name of a parish in Leitrim, Cluain-luachra, the meadow of the rushes; Cloonkeen, a very common townland name, Cluain-caoin beautiful meadow, which is also very often anglicised Clonkeen.

Two forms of the diminutive are in use: one, Cluainin [Clooneen], occurs in the Four Masters, and in the form Clooneen, (little meadow); it gives name to a great many townlands, chiefly in the west of Ireland. The other diminutive, Cluaintín, in the anglicised form Cloonteen, is the name of several places in Connaught and Munster. The plural of cluain is cluainte [cloonty], and this also enters into names. It is sometimes made cloonta, as in Cloontabonniv, in Clare, the meadows of the young pigs; Cloontakillew and Cloontakilla, in Mayo, the meadows of the wood. But it is much oftener made cloonty, or with the double plural, cloonties; which are themselves the names of several places. Occasionally it is made clinty in Ulster, as in Clinty, in the parish of Kirkinriola, in Antrim; Clintycracken, in Tyrone, Cluainte-croiceann, the meadows of the skins, so called probably from being used as a place for tanning.

Tuar [toor] signifies a bleach green; in an extended sense it is applied to any place where things were spread out to dry, and very often to fields along small streams, the articles being washed in the stream, and dried on its banks. The word is used in Munster, Connaught, and Leinster, but does not occur at all in the Ulster counties.

Toor is the almost universal anglicised form, and this and Tooreen (little bleach green) are the names of more than sixty townlands in the three provinces: as a part of compounds, it helps to give names to a still larger number. Toornageeha, in Waterford and Kerry, signifies the bleach green of the wind; Toorfune, in Tipperary, fair or white coloured bleach green; Tooreennablauha, in Kerry, the little bleach green of the flowers; Tooreennagrena, in Cork. sunny little bleach green.

It occasionally exhibits other forms in the Leinster counties. The Irish name of Ballitore, a village in Kildare, is Bel-atha-a'-tuair, the ford-mouth of the bleach green, and it took this name from a ford on the river Greece; Monatore (mon, a bog) occurs in Wicklow and Kildare; Tintore, in Queen's county, is in Irish Tigh-an-tuair, the house of the bleach green; and the same name without the article, becomes Tithewer, near Newtownmountkennedy, in Wicklow.

The peasantry in most parts of Ireland use a kind of double axe for grubbing or rooting up the surface of coarse land; it is called a grafán [graffaun], from the verb graf, to write, engrave or scrape, cognate with Greek graphō. Lands that have been grubbed or graffed with this instrument have in many cases received and preserved names, formed on the verb graf, that indicate the operation. This is the origin of those names that begin with the syllable graf; such as Graffa, Graffan, Graffee, Graffoge, Graffin, and Graffy, which are found in the four provinces, and all of which signify grubbed land.

Ploughing by the horsetail, and burning corn in the ear, were practised in Ireland down to a comparatively recent period; Arthur Young witnessed both in operation, less than a hundred years ago; but at that time they had nearly disappeared, partly on account of acts of Parliament framed expressly to prevent them, and partly through the increasing intelligence of the people. Loisgreán [lusgraun] is the term applied to corn burnt in the ear; and the particular spots where the process was carried on are in many cases indicated by names formed on this word.

The modern forms do not in general depart much from what would be indicated by the original pronunciation; it is well represented in Knockaluskraun, and Knockloskeraun, in Clare, each the name of a hill where corn used to be burned. The simple term gives name to Loskeran, near Ardmore, in Waterford.

Sometimes the word is pronounced lustraun; and this form is seen in Caherlustraun, near Tuam, in Galway, where the corn used to be burned in an ancient caher or stone fort; in Lugalustran, in Leitrim, and Stralustrin, in Fermanagh, the hollow, and the river holm of the burnt corn.

Land burnt in any way, whether by accident or design for agricultural purposes—as, for instance, when heath was burnt to encourage the growth of grass, as noticed by Boate (Nat. Hist., C. XIII., Sect. iv)—was designated by the word loisgthe [luskě], burnt; which in modern names is usually changed to lusky, losky, or lusk. Ballylusky, and Ballylusk, i. e. Baile-loisgthe, burnt town, are the names of several townlands, the former being found in the Munster counties, and the latter in Leinster, while it is made Ballylosky in Donegal: Molosky, in Clare, signifies burnt plain.

Sometimes the word teotán [totaun], a burning, is employed to express the same thing, as in Knockatotaun, in Mayo and Sligo, Cnoc-a'-teotain, the hill of the burning; Parkatotaun, in Limerick, the field of the burning.

It was formerly customary with those who kept cattle, to spend a great part of the summer wandering about with their herds among the mountain pastures, removing from place to place, as the grass became exhausted. During the winter they lived in their lowland villages, and as soon as they had tilled a spot of land in spring, they removed with their herds to the mountains till autumn, when they returned to gather the crops.

The mountain habitations where they lived, fed their cattle, and carried on their dairy operations during the summer, were called in Irish buaile [booly], a word evidently derived from bo, a cow. This custom existed down to the sixteenth century; and the poet Spenser describes it very correctly, as he witnessed it in his day:—"There is one use amongst them, to keepe their cattle, and to live themselves the most part of the yeare in boolies, pasturing upon the mountaine, and waste wilde places; and removing still to fresh land, as they have depastured the former" (View of the State of Ireland; Dublin edition, 1809, p. 82). O'Flaherty also notices the same custom:—"In summer time they drive their cattle to the mountaines, where such as looke to the cattle live in small cabbins for that season" (Iar-Connaught, c. 17). The term booley was not confined to the mountainous districts; for in some parts of Ireland it was applied to any place where cattle were fed or milked, or which was set apart for dairy purposes.

Great numbers of places retain the names of these dairy places, and the word buaile is generally represented in modern names by the forms Booley, Boley, Boola, and Boula, which are themselves the names of many places, and form the beginning of a still larger number. In Boleylug, near Baltinglass, in Wicklow, they must have built their "cabbins" for shelter in the lug or mountain hollow; Booladurragha, in Cork, and Booldurragh, in Carlow, dark booley (Buaile dorcha), probably from being shaded with trees; Booleyglass, a village in Kilkenny, green booley.

The word is combined in various other ways, and it assumes other forms, partly by corruption and partly by grammatical inflexion. Ballyboley, the name of some townlands in Antrim and Down, Ballyvooley, in the parish of Layd, Antrim, and Ballyvool, near Inistioge, Kilkenny, are all different forms of Baile-buaile, the town of the dairy place; and Boulabally, near Adare, in Limerick, is the same name with the terms reversed. Farranboley, near Dundrum, in Dublin, is booley land; Aughvollyshane, in the parish of Glenkeen, Tipperary, is in Irish Ath-bhuaile-Sheain, the ford of John's booley.

The diminutive buailín [boolteen], and the plural buailte [boolty], occur occasionally; Boolteens, and Boolteeny (see p. 30, VI.), in Kerry and Tipperary, both signify little dairy places; Boultypatrick, in Donegal, Patrick's booley.

CHAPTER VIII.

SUBDIVISIONS AND MEASURES OF LAND.

AMONG a people who followed the double occupation of tillage and pasturage, according as the country became populated, it would be divided and subdivided, and parcelled out among the people; boundaries would be determined, and standards of measurement adopted. The following was the old partition of the country, according to Irish authorities:—There were five provinces: Leinster, Ulster, Connaught, Munster, and Meath, each of which was divided into tricha-céds (thirty hundreds), or trichas, Meath containing 18, Connaught 30, Ulster 36, Leinster 31, and Munster 70; each tricha contained 30 báile-biataighs (victualler's town), and each Baile-biataigh, 12 seisreachs. The division into provinces is still retained with some modification, but the rest of the old distribution is obsolete. The present subdivision is into provinces, counties, baronies, parishes, and townlands; in all Ireland there are 325 baronies, 2422 parishes, and about 62,000 townlands. Various minor subdivisions and standards of measurement were adopted in different parts of the country; and so far as these are represented in our present nomenclature, I will notice them here.*

Seisreach [sheshragh] is commonly translated "plowland;" it is derived from seisear, six, and each, a horse, and it was used to denote the extent of land a six-horse plough would turn up in one year. We find the term in Sheshheraghmore, and Sheshheraghscanlan, near Borrisokane, in Tipperary; in Sheshheraghkeale (keale, narrow), near Nenagh, the same name as Sistrakeel (see p. 53, IV.), in the parish of Tamlaght Finlagan, Derry; and in Drumsastry, in Fermanagh, the ridge of the plowland.

The terms in most common use to denote portions of land or territory, were those expressing fractional parts, of which there are five that occur very frequently. The word leath [läh] signifies half, and we find it forming part of names all over Ireland. Thus, when a seisreach was divided into two equal parts, each was called leath-sheisreach [lahesheragh], half-plowland, which gives name to Lahesheragh, in Kerry,

* For further information the reader is referred to Dr. Reeves's paper "On the Townland Distribution of Ireland," (Proc. R. I. Academy, Vol. VII., p. 473), from which much of the information in this chapter has been derived; and to a paper "On the Territorial Divisions of the Country," by Sir Thomas Larcom, prefixed to the "Relief Correspondence of the Commissioners of Public Works."

to Lahesseragh, in Tipperary, and to Ballylahessery, near Dungarvan, in Waterford, which signifies the town of the half-plowland. In like manner, half a townland was denoted by the term Leath-bhaile, pronounced, and generally anglicised, Lavally, and Levally, which are the names of about thirty townlands scattered through the four provinces.

The territory of Lecale, in Down, now forming two baronies, is called in the Irish authorities Leth-Cathail, Cathal's half, or portion. Cathal [Cahal], who was fifth in descent from Deman, king of Ulidia, in the middle of the sixth century, flourished about the year 700; and in a division of territory this district was assigned to him, and took his name. It had been previously called Magh-inis, which Colgan translates Insula campestris, the level island, being a plain tract nearly surrounded by the sea.

Trian [treen] denotes the third part of anything; it was formerly a territorial designation in frequent use, and it has descended to the present time in the names of several places. A tripartite division of territory in Tipperary gave origin to the name of the barony of Middlethird, which is a translation from the Irish, Trian-meadhanach [mānagh] as used by the Four Masters. There was a similar division in Waterford, and two of the three parts—now two baronies—are still known by the names of Middlethird and Upperthird. The barony of Dufferin, in Down, is called by the Four Masters Dubh-thrian, the black third, the sound of which is very well represented in the present name.

Trian generally takes the forms of treat and trien, which constitute or begin the names of about 70 townlands in the four provinces. Treanamullin, near Stranorlar, in Donegal, signifies the third part or division of the mill, i. e. having a mill on it; Treanfohanaun, in Mayo, the thistle-producing third; Treanlaur, in Galway and Mayo, middle third; Treanmanagh, in Clare, Kerry, and Limerick, same meaning; Trienaltenagh, in Londonderry, the third of the precipices or cliffs.

Ceathramhadh [carhoo, or carrow] signifies a quarter, from ceathair [cahir] four. The old townlands, or ballybetaghs, were very often divided into quarters, each of which was commonly designated by this word Ceathramhadh, which, in the present names, generally takes one of the two forms carrow and carhoo; the former being the more usual, but the latter occurring very often in Cork and Kerry. Carrow forms or begins the names of more than 700 townlands, and Carhoo, of about 30.

The four quarters into which the townland was divided were generally distinguished from one another by adjectives descriptive of size, position, shape, or quality of the land, or by suffixing the names of the occupiers. Thus, there are more than 60 modern townlands called Carrowkeel, Ceathramhadh-caol, narrow quarter; Carrowgarraiff and Carrowgarve, rough (garbh) quarter, is the name of sixteen; there are 25 called Carrowbane and Carrobaun, white quarter; 24 called Carrowbeg, little quarter; and more than 60 called Carrowmore, great quarter. Lecarrow, half-quarter, gives name to about 60 townlands, the greater number of them in Connaught.

A fifth part is denoted by coigeadh [cōga]: the application of this term to land is very ancient, for in the old form coiced it occurs in the Book of Armagh, where it is translated quinta pars. In later times it was often used in the sense of "province," which application seems to have originated in the division of Ireland into five provinces. In its primitive signification of a fifth part—probably the fifth part of an ancient townland—it has given names to several places. Cooga, its most usual modern form, is the name of several townlands in Connaught and Munster; there are three townlands in Mayo called Coogue; and Coogaquid, in Clare, signifies literally “fifth part.”

Seiseadh [shesha] the sixth part; to be distinguished from seisreach. As a measure of land, it was usual in Ulster and north Connaught, where in the forms Sess, Sessia, Sessiagh, it gives names to about thirty townlands. It occurs also in Munster, though in forms slightly different; as in case of Sheshia, in Clare, and Sheshiv, in Limerick; Shesharoe, in Tipperary, red sixth; Sheshodonnell, in Clare, O'Donnell's sixth part.

Several other Irish terms were employed; such as Ballyboe, or “cow-land,” which prevailed in some of the Ulster counties, and which is still a very common townland name in Donegal. In some of the counties of Munster, they had in use a measure colled gníomh [gneeve], which was the twelfth part of a plowland; and this term occurs occasionally in the other provinces. It has given name to about twenty townlands, now called Gneeve and Gneevs, the greater number of them in Cork and Kerry. There is a place in the parish of Kilmacabea, Cork, called Three-gneevs; and in the same county there are two townlands, each called Two-gneevs.

In many parts of Ireland the Anglo-Norman settlers introduced terms derived from their own language, and several of these are now very common as townland names. Cartron signifies a quarter, and is derived through the French quarteron from the mediæval Latin quarteronus; it was in very common use in Connaught as well as in Longford, Westmeath, and King's County: and it was applied to a parcel of land varying in amount from 60 to 160 acres. There are about 80 townlands called Cartron, chiefly in Connaught, and 60 others of whose names it forms the beginning. The terms with which it is compounded are generally Irish, such as Cartronganny, near Mullingar, Cartron-gainimh, sandy cartron; Cartronagilta, in Cavan, the cartron of the reeds; Cartronrathroe, in Mayo, the cartron of the red fort.

Tate, or tath, is an English word, and meant 60 native acres. It occurs chiefly in Fermanagh, Monaghan, and Tyrone, generally in the forms tat, tatt, and tatty; and, as in the case of cartron, it usually compounds with Irish words. Thus Tattendillur, in Fermanagh, is Tat-an-duilleabhair, the tate of the foliage. Tattynageeragh, in the parish of Clones, in Fermanagh, the tate of the sheep; Tattintlieve, in Monaghan, the tate of the mountain.

In Cavan, certain measures of land were called by the names poll, gallon, and pottle. Thus, Pollakeel is the narrow poll; Pollamore, great poll, &c. In most other counties, however, poll is an Irish word, signifying a hole. Pottlebane and Pottleboy, in Cavan, signify white and yellow pottle, respectively; Gallon-nambraher, the friars' gallon, &c.

CHAPTER IX.

NUMERICAL COMBINATIONS.

WHILE names involving numerical combinations are found all over the world, a careful examination would be pretty sure to show, that each people had a predilection for one or more particular numbers. During my examination of Irish proper names, I have often been struck with the constant recurrence of the numbers two and three; and after having specially investigated the subject, I have found, as I hope to be able to show, that names involving these two numbers are so numerous as to constitute a distinct peculiarity, and that this is the case most especially with regard to the number two.

I never saw it stated that the number two was in Ireland considered more remarkable than any other; but from whatever cause it may have arisen, certain it is, that there existed in the minds of the Irish people a distinctly marked predilection to designate persons or places, where circumstances permitted it, by epithets expressive of the idea of duality, the epithet being founded on some circumstance connected with the object named; and such circumstances were often seized upon to form a name in preference to others equally or more conspicuous. We have, of course, as they have in all countries, names with combinations of other numbers, and those containing the number three are very numerous; but the number two is met with many times more frequently than all the others put together.

The Irish word for two that occurs in names is dá or dhá, both forms being used ; dá is pronounced daw ; but in the other form, dh, which has a peculiar and rather faint guttural sound, is altogether suppressed in modern names ; the word dhá being generally represented by the vowel a, while in many cases modern contraction has obliterated every trace of a representative letter. It is necessary to bear in mind that dá or dhá generally causes aspiration, and in a few cases eclipses consonants, and prefixes n to vowels (see pp. 18 and 20, supra).

We find names involving the number two recorded in Irish history, from the most ancient authorities down to the MSS. of the seventeenth century, and they occur in proportion quite as numerous as at the present day ; showing that this curious tendency is not of modern origin, but that it has descended, silent and unnoticed, from ages of the most remote antiquity.

There is a village and parish in the north-west of Tipperary, on the shore of Lough Derg, now called Terryglass ; its Irish name, as used in many Irish authorities, is Tir-da-ghlas, the territory of the two streams ; and the identity of this with the modern Terryglass is placed beyond all doubt by a passage in the "Life of St. Fintan of Clonenagh," which describes Tir-da-glas as "in the territory of Munster, near the river Shannon." The great antiquity of this name is proved by the fact that it is mentioned by Adamnan in his "Life of St. Columba" (Lib. II., Cap. xxxvi.), written in the end of the seventh century ; but according to his usual custom, instead of the Irish name, he gives the Latin equivalent : in the heading of the chapter it is called Ager duorum rivorum, and in the text, Rus duum rivulorum, either of which is a correct translation of Tir-da-ghlas.^{*} There is a subdivision of the townland of Clogher, in the parish of Kilnoe, Clare, called Terryglass, which has the same Irish form and meaning as the other.

In the Book of Leinster there is a short poem, ascribed to Finn Mac Cumhail, accounting for the name of Magh-da-ghéisi, in Leinster, the plain of the two swans; and the Dinnsenchus gives a legend about the name of the river Owendalulagh, which rises on the slope of Slieve Aughty, and flows into Lough Cooter, near Gort, in Galway. This legend states, that when Echtghe [Ektě], a Tuatha De Danann lady, married Fergus Lusca, cupbearer to the king of Connaught, she brought with her, two cows remarkable for their milk-bearing fruitfulness, which were put to graze on the banks of this stream; and from this circumstance it was called Abhainn-da-loilgheach, the river of the two milch cows. According to the same authority, Slieve Aughty took its name from this lady — Sliabh-Echtghe, Echtghe's mountain. Several other instances of names of this class, mentioned in ancient authorities, will be cited as I proceed.

Though this peculiarity is not so common in personal as in local names, yet the number of persons mentioned in Irish writings whose names involve the number two, is sufficiently large to be very remarkable. The greater number of these names appear to be agnomina, which described certain peculiarities of the individuals, and which were imposed for the sake of distinction, after a fashion prevalent among most nations before the institution of surnames.

^{*} See Reeves's Adamnan, where Ager duorum rivorum is identified with Terryglass.

One of the three Collas who conquered Ulster in the fourth century (see p. 127) was called Colla-da-chrich, Colla of the two territories. Da-chrich was a favourite sobriquet, and no doubt, in case of each individual, it records the fact of his connexion, either by possession or residence, with two countries or districts; in case of Colla, it most probably refers to two territories in Ireland and Scotland, in the latter of which he lived some years in a state of banishment before his invasion of Ulster. In the Martyrology of Donegal there are nine different persons mentioned, called Ferdachrich, the man of the two territories.

The word Dubh applied to a dark-visaged person is often followed by da; thus the Four Masters mention two persons named Dubhdabharc, the black (man) of the two ships; four named Dubhdachrich; eight, Dubhdabhoireann (of the two stony districts?); two, Dubhdainbher, of the two estuaries; one, Dubhdaingean, of the two daughters; four, Dubhdaleithe, of the two sides or parties; and two, Dubhdathuath, of the two districts or cantreds. In the "Genealogy of Corcaluidhe" we find Dubhdamhagh, of the two plains; and in the Martyrology of Donegal, Dubhdalocha, of the two lakes.

Fiacha Muilleathan, king of Munster in the third century, was called Ferdaliach, the man of the two sorrows, because his mother died and his father was killed in the battle of Magh Mucruimhe on the day of his birth. The father of Máine Mor, the ancestor of the Hy Many, was Eochaidh, surnamed Ferdaghiall, the man of the two hostages. Many more names might be cited, if it were necessary, to extend this list; and while the number two is so common, we meet with few names involving any other number, except three.

It is very natural that a place should be named from two prominent objects forming part of it, or in connexion with it, and names of this kind are occasionally met with in most countries. The fact that they occur in Ireland would not be considered remarkable were it not for these two circumstances—first, they are, beyond all comparison, more numerous than could be reasonably expected; and secondly, the word dá is usually expressed, and forms part of the names.

Great numbers of places are scattered here and there through the country whose names express position between two physical features, such as rivers, mountains, lakes, &c., those between two rivers being the most numerous. Killederdaowen, in the parish of Duniry, Galway, is called in Irish, Coill-eder-da-abhainn, the wood between two rivers; and Killadrown, in the parish of Drumcullen, King's county, is evidently the same word shortened by local corruption. Drumderaown, in Cork, and Drumdiraowen, in Kerry, are both modern forms of Druim-'dir-dhá-abhainn, the ridge between two rivers, where the Irish dhá is represented by a in the present names. In Cloon-ederowen, Galway—the meadow between two rivers—there is no representative of the dha, though it exists in the Irish name; and a like remark applies to Bally-ederown (the townland between two rivers), an old castle situated in the angle where the rivers Funcheon and Araglin, in Cork, mingle their waters. Coracow, in the parish of Killaha, Kerry, is a name much shortened from its original Comhrac-dhá-abha, the meeting of the two streams. The Four Masters at A. D. 528, record a battle fought at a place called Luachair-moretir-da-inbhir, the large rushy place between two river mouths, otherwise called Ailbhe, or Cluain-Ailbhe (Ailbhe's meadow) now Clonalvy, in the county Meath.

With glaise (a stream), instead of abhainn, we have Ederdaglass, the name of two townlands in Fermanagh, meaning (a place) between two streams; and Drumederglass, in Cavan, the ridge between two streams. Though all trace of da is lost in this name, it is preserved in the Down Survey, where the place is called Drumaderdaglass.

Ederdacurragh, in Fermanagh, means (a place) between two marshes; Aderavoher, in Sligo, is in Irish Eadar-dha-bhothair (a place) between two roads, an idea that is otherwise expressed in Gouldavoher, near Mungret, Limerick, the fork of the two roads. Drumdiralough, in Kerry, the ridge between two lakes; and Drumederalena, in Sligo, the ridge between the two lenas, or meadows; Inchideraille, near Inchageelagh, is in Irish Inis-idir-dha-fháill, the island or river holm between two cliffs; a similar position has given name to Derdaoil or Dariel, a little village in the parish of Kilmastulla, Tipperary, which is shortened from the Irish Idir-da-fhaill, between two cliffs; Cloonderavally, in Sligo, the cloon or meadow between the two ballies, or townlands.

Crockada, in the parish of Clones, Fermanagh, is only a part of the Irish name, Cnoc-eadar-da-ghreuch, the hill between the two marshy flats; and the true form of the present name would be Knockadder. Mogh, the name of a townland in the parish of Rathlynin, Tipperary, is also an abbreviation of a longer name; the inhabitants call it Magh-idir-dha-abhainn, the plain between two rivers.

The well-known old church of Aghadoe, near Kilarney, which gives name to a parish, is called by the Four Masters, at 1581, Achadh-da-eó, the field of the two yew trees, which must have been growing near each other, and must have been sufficiently large and remarkable to attract general attention. Part of the townland of Drumharkan Glebe, in the parish of Cloone, Leitrim, is called Cooldao, the back of the two yews. In the townland of Cornagee, parish of Killinagh, Cavan, there is a deep cavern, into which a stream sinks; it is called Polladaossan, the hole of the two bushes.

In the parish of Killashee, Longford, there is a village and townland called Cloondara, containing the ruins of what was once an important ecclesiastical establishment; it is mentioned by the Four Masters, at 1323, and called Cluain-da-rath, the meadow of the two raths; and there is a townland of the same name in the parish of Tisrara, Roscommon. Near Crossmolina, in Mayo, is a townland called Glendavoolagh, the glen of the two boolies, or dairy places; and Daldreen, in the same county, is the two dreens, or sloe bushes.

The parish of Donagh, in Monaghan, takes its name from an old church, the ruins of which are still to be seen near the village of Glasslough; it is mentioned twice by the Four Masters, and its full name, as written by them, is Domhnach-maighe-da-chlaoine, the church of the plain of the two slopes. Dromdaleague, the name of a village and parish in Cork, signifies the ridge of the two stones. Ballydehob, in the south of the same county, took its name from a ford, which is called in Irish Bel-atha-da-chab, the ford of the two cabs or mouths; the two mouths, I suppose, describing some peculiarity of shape.

Several places derive their names from two plains: thus Damma, the name of two townlands in Kilkenny, is simply Da-mhagh, two plains; Rosdama, in the parish of Grange, same county, the wood of the two plains. That part of the King's county now occupied by the baronies of Warrenstown and Coolestown was anciently called Tuath-da-mhaighe, the district of the two plains, by which name it is frequently mentioned in the annals, and which is sometimes anglicised Tethmoy; the remarkable hill of Drumcaw, giving name to a townland in this neighbourhood, was anciently called Druim-da-mhaighe, from the same district; and we find Glendavagh, the glen of the two plains, in the parish of Aghaloo, Tyrone.

The valley of Glendalough, in Wicklow, takes its name from the two lakes, so well known to tourists; it is called in Irish authorities Gleann-da-locha, which the author of the Life of St. Kevin translates "the valley of the two lakes." There is an island in the Shannon, in the parish of Killadysert, Clare, called Inishdadroum, which is mentioned in the "Wars of GG," by the name of Inis-da-dromand, the island of the two drums or backs, from its shape; and a similar peculiarity of form has given name to Inishdavar, in the parish of Derryvullan, Fermanagh (of the two tops); to Cornadarum, Fermanagh, the round hill of the two drums or ridges; and to Corradeverrid, in Cavan, the hill of the two caps. Tuam, in Galway, is called in the Annals Tuaim-da-ghualann, the tumulus of the two shoulders, evidently from the shape of the ancient sepulchral mound from which the place has its name.

Desertcreat, a townland giving name to a parish in Tyrone, is mentioned by the Four Masters as the scene of a battle between the O'Neills and the O'Donnells, in A. D. 1281, and it is called by them Diseart-da-chrioch, the desert or hermitage of the two territories; they mention also a place called Magh-da-chairneach, the plain of the two cars; Magh-da-ghabhal, the plain of the two forks; Ailiunda-bhernach, the island of the two gaps; Magh-da-Chainneach, the plain of the two Cainneachs (men). The district between Lough Conn and the river Moy was anciently called An Da Bhac, the two bends, under which name it is frequently mentioned in the annals.

There is a townland in the parish of Rossinver, Leitrim, called Lisdarush, the fort of the two promontories; and on the side of Hungry Hill, in the parish of Kilcaskan, Cork, is a small lake which is called Coomadavallig, the hollow of the two roads; in Roscommon we find Cloonadacarra, the meadow of the two weirs; and the Four Masters mention Clar-atha-da-charadh, the plain of the ford of the two weirs; Gubbacrock, in the parish of Killesher, Fermanagh, is written in Irish Gob-dha-chnoc, the beak or point of the two hills.

Dundareirke is the name of an ancient castle in Cork, built by the M'Carthys, signifying the fortress of the two prospects (Dun-da-radharc), and the name is very suitable; for, according to Smith, "it is on a hill, and commands a vast extended view west as far as Kerry, and east almost to Cork;" there is a townland of the same name, but written Dundaryark, in the parish of Danesfort, Kilkenny.

The preceding names were derived from conspicuous physical features, and their origin is therefore natural enough, so far as each individual name is concerned; their great number, as already remarked, is what gives them significance. But those I am now about to bring forward admit in general of no such explanation, and appear to me to prove still more conclusively the existence of this remarkable disposition in the minds of the people, to look out for groups of two. Here also, as in the preceding class, names crowd upon us with remarkable frequency, both in ancient authorities and in the modern list of townlands.

Great numbers of places have been named from two animals of some kind. If we are to explain these names from natural occurrences, we must believe that the places were so called because they were the favourite haunt of the two animals commemorated; but it is very strange that so many places should be named from just two, while there are very few from one, three, or any other number—except in the general way of a genitive singular or a genitive plural. Possibly it may be explained to some extent by the natural pairing of male and female; but this will not explain all, nor even a considerable part, as any one may see from the illustrations that follow. I believe that most or all of these names have their origin in legends or superstitions, and that the two animals were very often supernatural, viz., fairies, or ghosts, or human beings transformed by Tuatha De Danann enchantment.

We very frequently meet with two birds—dá-én. A portion of the Shannon near Clonmacnoise was anciently called Snamh-dá-én, the swimming ford of the two birds. The parish of Duneane, in Antrim, has got its present name by a slight contraction from Dun-dá-én, the fortress of the two birds, which is its name in the Irish authorities, among others, the Felire of Aengus. There is a mountain stretching between Lough Gill and Collooney, Sligo, which the Four Masters mention at 1196 by the name of Sliabh-dá-én, the mountain of the two birds, now called Slieve Daeane; it is curious that a lake on the north side of the same mountain is called Lough Dagea, the lake of the two geese, which are probably the two birds that gave name to the mountain. There is a townland in the parish of Kinawly, Fermanagh, called Rossdanean, the peninsula of two birds; and Colgan (A. SS., p. 42, note 9) mentions a place near Lough Neagh, called Cluain-da-én, the meadow of the two birds.

Two birds of a particular kind have also given their names to several places, and among these, two ravens seem to be favourites. In the last-mentioned parish is a townland called Aghindaiagh, in Irish Achadh-an-da-fhiach, the field of the two ravens; in the townland of Kilcolman, parish of same name, Kerry, is a pit or cavern called Poll-da-fhiach, the hole of the two ravens; we find in Cavan, Ned-daiagh, the nest of the two ravens; in Galway, Cuilleendaeagh, and in Kerry Glandaeagh, the little wood, and the glen, of the two ravens. With Branóg, another name for the same bird, we have Brannock Island, near Great Aran Island, Galway bay, which is called in Irish Oilean-da-bhranóg, the island of the two ravens. Aghadachor, in Donegal, means the field of the two herons or cranes. There is a townland in the parish of Killinvoy, Roscommon, whose name is improperly anglicised Lisdaulan; the Four Masters, at 1380, call it Lios-da-lon, the fort of the two blackbirds.

Several places are called from two hounds; such as Moyacomb, in Wicklow (see p. 48); Cahiracon, two townlands in Clare, which are in Irish Cathair-dhá-chon, the caher or stone fortress of the two hounds; and Lisdachon, in Westmeath. In the parish of Devenish, Fermanagh, there are two conterminous town-lands called Big Dog and Little Dog; these singular appellations derive their origin from the modern division into two unequal parts, of an ancient tract which is called in the annals, Sliabh-dá-chon, the mountain of the two hounds. We find also Cloondacon, in Mayo, the meadow of the two hounds.

In several other places we have two oxen commemorated, as in Cloondadauv, in Galway, which the annalists write Cluain-dá-damh, the meadow of the two oxen; Rosdagamph, in Fermanagh, and Aughadanove, Armagh, the promontory and the field of the two oxen; in the first, d is changed to g (see p. 52), and in the second, da prefixes n to the vowel. At the year 606, the Four Masters mention a lake in which a crannoge was built, situated in Oriel, but not now known, called Loch-da-damh, the lake of the two oxen.

Two bucks are commemorated in such names as Ballydavock, Cappadavock, Glendavock, Lisdavock (town, plot, glen, fort), and Attidavock, the site of the house of the two bucks. The parish of Cloonyhurk, in King's County, takes its name from a townland which the Four Masters call Cluain-da-thorc, the meadow of the two boars; Glendahork, in Mayo, is the Glen of the two boars; and Lisdavuck, in King's county, the fort of the two pigs.

Cloondanagh, in Clare, is in Irish Cluain-da-neach, the meadow of the two horses; we find the same two animals in Tullyloughdaugh, in Fermanagh, and Aghadaugh, in Westmeath; the second meaning the field, and the first the hill of the lake, of the two horses; and Cloondelara, near Clonmacnoise, is the meadow of the two mares. Clondalee, in the parish of Killyon, Meath, is called in Irish Cluain-da-laogh, the meadow of the two calves. Aghadavoyle, in Armagh is the field of the two maols, or hornless cows; two animals of the same kind have given name to a little island in Mayo, viz., Inishdaweel; while we have two yellow cows in Inishdawee, the name of two townlands in Galway.

There is a legend concerning the origin of Clondagad, in Clare, the cloon of the two gads or withes, and another accounting for the name Dun-da-leath-glas, anciently applied to the great rath at Downpatrick, the fortress of the two broken locks, or fetters. The two remarkable mountains in Kerry now called the Paps, were anciently called, and are still, in Irish, Da-chích-Danainne, the two paps of Danann (see p. 152); and the plain on which they stand is called Bun-a'-da-chích, the bottom or foundation of the two Paps: Dromahaire, the name of a village in Leitrim, signifies the ridge of the two air-spirits or demons (see p. 181).

In this great diversity it must be supposed that two persons would find a place; and accordingly we find Kildaree, the church of the two kings, the name of two townlands in Galway (for which see Sir William Wilde's "Lough Corrib"), and of another near Crossmolina, Mayo. There is a fort one mile south of the village of Killoscully, Tipperary, called Lisdavraher, the fort of the two friars; and there is another of the same name in the south of Ballymoylan townland, parish of Youghalarra, in the same county.

There is a parish called Toomore, in the county of Mayo, taking its name from an old church standing near the river Moy; it is also the name of a townland in the parish of Aughrim, Roscommon, and of a townland and parish in Sligo. This is a very curious, and a very ancient name. Toomore, in Mayo, is written Tuaim-da-bhodhar by Duald Mac Firbis and the Four Masters; and Tuaim-da-bhodar in a poem in the "Book of Lecan." The pronunciation of the original is Tooma-our, which easily sank into Toomore; and the name signifies the tomb of the two deaf persons; but who they were, neither history nor tradition records.

The memory of the two venerable people who gave name to Cordalea, in the parish of Kilmore, Cavan, has quite perished from the face of the earth, except only so far as it is preserved in the name Cor-da-liath, the hill of the two grey persons. Two people of a different complexion are commemorated in Glendaduff, in Mayo, the glen of the two black visaged persons. Meendacalliagh, in the parish of Lower Fahan, Donegal, means the meen, or mountain flat of the two calliaghs, or hags, probably a pair of those old witches who used to turn themselves into hares, and suck the cows.

It must occur to any one who glances through these names to ask himself the question—what was the origin of this curious custom? I cannot believe that it is a mere accident of language, or that it sprang up spontaneously, without any particular cause. I confess myself wholly in the dark, unable to offer any explanation: I have never met anything that I can call to mind in the whole range of Irish literature tending in the least degree to elucidate it. Is it the remnant of some ancient religious belief, or some dark superstition, dispelled by the light of Christianity? or does it commemorate some widespread social custom, prevailing in times beyond the reach of history or tradition, leaving its track on the language as the only manifestation of its existence? We know that among some nations certain numbers were accounted sacred, like the number seven among the Hebrews. Was two a sacred number with the primitive people of this country? I refrain from all conjecture, though the subject is sufficiently tempting; I give the facts, and leave to others the task of accounting for them.

The number three occurs also with remarkable frequency in Irish proper names, so much so that it would incline one to believe that the Irish had a predilection for grouping things in triads like the Welsh. Dr. Reeves has observed that the old chroniclers often enumerate rivers in threes; such as the three Uinseanns; the three Sucks; the three Finns; the three Coimdes; the three rivers, Siuir, Feil, and Ercre; the three, Fleasc, Mand, and Labhrann; the three black rivers, Fubhna, Torann, and Callann; the nine Brosnachs (3×3); the nine Righes, &c.—all these taken from the Four Masters.

Mr. Hennessy has directed my attention to a great number of triple combinations; such as the three Tuathas or districts in Connaught; the places called three castles in Kilkenny and Wicklow; Bearna-tri-carbad, the gap of the three chariots, a place in the county Clare; the carn of the three crosses at Clonmacnoise; several places called three plains; the three Connaughts; and many others. He has also given me a long list, taken from the annals, of names of persons distinguished by three qualities, (such as Fearna-dtri-mbuadh, the man of the three virtues, a cognomen of Conary More), which would enable me to extend this enumeration of triplets much farther; but as I am at present concerned only about local names, I shall content myself with simply noting the fact, that names of this kind occur in great numbers in our old writings.

Many of these combinations were no doubt adopted in Christian times in honor of the Trinity, of which the name of Trevet (see p. 123) is an example; and it is probable that the knowledge of this mystery disposed men's minds to notice more readily combinations of three, and to give names accordingly, even in cases where no direct reference to the Trinity was intended.

We learn the origin of Duntryleague near Galbally in Limerick, from a passage in the Book of Lismore, which states that "Cormac Cas, (king of Munster), son of Oilíoll Olum (see p. 125 supra) fought the battle of Knocksouna (near Kilmallock) against Eochy Abhradhruadh [Avraroo], king of Ulster, in which Eochy was slain; and Cormac was wounded (in the head), so that he was three years under cure, with his brain continually flowing from his head." Then a goodly dun was constructed for him, "having in the middle a beautiful clear spring, and a great royal house was built over the well, and three liagáns (pillar stones) were placed round it, on which was laid the bed of the king, so that his head was in the middle between the three pillars. And one of his attendants stood constantly by him with a cup, pouring the water of the well on his head. He died there after that, and was buried in a cave within the dun; and from this is (derived) the name of the place, Dun-tri-liag, the fortress of the three pillar stones."

The erection of three stones like those at Duntryleague must have been very usual, for we find several names containing the compound tri-liag, three pillar stones. It occurs simply in the form of Trillick, as the name of a village in Tyrone, and of two townlands, one in Donegal, and the other in Fermanagh. In the parish of Ballymacormick, Longford, there are two townlands called respectively, Trillickacurry and Trillickatemple, the trillick or Three Stones of the marsh, and of the church. Near Dromore, in Down, we find Edentrillick, and in the parish of Tynan, Armagh, Rathtrillick, the first the hill brow, and the second the fort, of the three pillar stones.

Several places take their names from three persons, who were probably joint occupiers. In the parish of Kilbride, Meath, there is a townland called Ballintry, Baile-an-tri, the town of the three (persons). The more usual word employed in this case, however, is triur [troor], which means, not three in the abstract, but three persons. Ballintruer in the parish of Donaghmore, Wicklow, has the same meaning as Ballintry. In the parish of Ramoan, Antrim, is a hill called Carn-troor, where three persons must have been buried under a carn; and in the parish of Templecorran, same county, is another hill called Slieveatruer, which name appears to be a corruption from Slieveatroor, the mountain of the three persons.

Cavantreeduff, in the parish of Cleenish, Fermanagh, has probably some legendary story connected with it, the Irish name being Cabhan-tri-damh, the round hill of the three oxen. The celebrated castle of Portnatrynod, at Lifford, of which the name is now forgotten, and even its very site unknown, is repeatedly mentioned in the annals, and always called Port-nadtri-namhad, the port or bank of the three enemies; who these three hostile persons were, history does not tell, though the old people of Lifford have a legend about them.

There is a place in the parish of Gartan, Donegal, called Bunnatreesruhan, the mouth of the three streamlets. A fort with three circumvallations is often called Lisnatreeclee, or more correctly Lisnadreeglee, i. e. in Irish, Lios-na-dtri-gcladh, the lis of the three mounds. Ballytober, in the Glynn of Antrim, is a shortened form of the correct Irish name, Baile-na-dtri-dtobar, the town of the three springs.

We find occasionally other numbers also in names. At the year 872, the Four Masters mention a place called Rath-oen-bo, the fort of the one cow. There is a place of this name, now called Raheanbo, in the parish of Churchtown, Westmeath, but whether it is the Rath-oen-bo of the annals is uncertain. In the parish of Magheross, Monaghan, is a townland called Corrinenty, in Irish Cor-an-aen-tighe, the round hill of the one house; and Boleyneendorrish is the name of a place near Ardrahan, Galway, signifying the booly or dairy place of the one door.

The town of Carlow is called in Irish authorities, Cetherloch, quadruple lake; and the tradition is that the Barrow anciently formed four lakes there, of which, however, there is now no trace. The Irish name is pronounced Caherlough, which was easily softened down to the present name. By early English writers, it is generally called Catherlogh or Katherlagh, which is almost identical with the Irish; Boate calls it "Catherlogh or Carlow," showing that in his time the present form was beginning to be developed. In the parish of Rathronan, Limerick, is a townland called Kerrykyle, Ceithre-choill, four woods. A townland in the parish of Tulla, Clare, is called Derrykeadgran, the oak wood of the hundred trees; and there is a parish in Kilkenny, called Tullyhaught, or in Irish Tulaigh-hocht, the hill of the eight (persons).

PART III.

NAMES COMMEMORATING ARTIFICIAL STRUCTURES.

CHAPTER I.

HABITATIONS AND FORTRESSES.

BEFORE the introduction of Christianity, buildings of all the various kinds erected in Ireland, whether domestic, military, or sepulchral, were round or nearly round in shape. This is sufficiently proved by the numerous forts and mounds that still remain all over the country, and which are almost universally circular. We find moreover in our old MSS. many passages in which the strongholds of the chiefs are described as of this shape; and in the ancient Life of St. Patrick ascribed to St. Evin, there is an Irish stanza quoted as the composition of a druid named Con, in which it is predicted, that the custom of building houses narrow and quadrangular, would be introduced among other innovations by St. Patrick.

The domestic and military structures in use among the ancient Irish were denoted by the words, lios, rath, dun, cathair, brugh, &c.; and these terms are still in use and applied to the very same objects. A notion very generally prevails, though much less so now than formerly, that the circular forts which still exist in great numbers in every county in Ireland, were erected by the Danes ; and they are hence very often called “Danish raths.” It is difficult to trace the origin of this opinion, unless we ascribe it to the well-known tendency of the peasantry to attribute almost every remarkable ancient work to the Danes. These people had, of course, fortresses of some kind in the maritime towns where they were settled, such as Dublin, Limerick, Waterford, Donegal, &c., and it is not unlikely that they may have taken, and for a long time occupied, some of the strongholds they found in the country ; but that the raths and lisses are not of Danish origin would be proved by this fact alone, that they are found in every part of Ireland, and more plentifully in districts where the Danes never gained any footing, than where they had settlements.

There is abundance of evidence to show that these structures were the dwellings of the people of this country before the adoption of houses of a rectangular form ; the larger raths belonging to the better classes, and the great fortified duns to the princes and chieftains. The remains still to be seen at the historic sites—Tara, The Navan, Rathcroghan, Bruree, &c.—places celebrated for ages as royal residences—afford striking testimony to the truth of this ; for here we find the finest and most characteristic specimens of the Irish circular forts in all their sizes and varieties.

But besides, in our ancient writings, they are constantly mentioned as residences under their various names of dun, rath, lios, &c.—as constantly as houses and castles are in books of the last two or three centuries. To illustrate this, I will give a few passages, which I might extend almost indefinitely, if it were necessary. In the “Feast of Dun-na-ngedh” (“Battle of Moyrath”), Congal Claen thus addresses his foster father, king Domhnall : — “Thou didst place a woman of thine own tribe to nurse me in the garden of the lios in which thou dwelledst." On which O'Donovan remarks:—"The Irish kings and chieftains lived at this period (A. D. 637) in the great earthen raths or lisses, the ruins of which are still so numerous in Ireland." In the same tale we read of two visitors that "they were conducted into the dun, and a dinner sufficient for a hundred was given to them" (p. 22); and in another place, king Domhnall says to Congal:—"Go to view the great feast which is in the dun" (p. 24).

In the "Forbais Dromadamhghaire" (see p. 94, supra), we read that when Cormac sent to demand tribute from the men of Munster, they refused; but as there was a great scarcity in Cormac's dominions, they offered to relieve him by a gift of "a cow out of each lios in Munster." In the Poem of Dubhthach ua Lugair in the Book of Leinster, celebrating the triumphs of Enna Kinsellagh, king of Leinster, it is stated that the tribute which was paid to Enna out of Munster, was "an uinge of gold from every lios."

In many cases, too, we find the building of raths or lisses recorded. Thus in the passage quoted from the Book of Leinster, (p. 83 supra), queen Maev sentences the five sons of Dihorba to "raise a rath" around her, which should be "the chief city of Ulster for ever." In the "Battle of Moylena" (p. 2), it is stated that Nuadhat, the foster father of Owen More (see p. 125, supra) "raised a kingly rath on Magh Feimhin." In the Book of Armagh, and in several of the ancient Lives of St. Patrick, it is stated that on a certain occasion, the saint heard the voices of workmen who were building a rath; and Jocelin, in relating the same circumstance, says that the work in which they were engaged was "Rayth, i. e. murus."

The houses in which the families lived were built within the enclosed area, timber being, no doubt, the material employed, in accordance with the well-known custom of the ancient Irish; and the circumvallations of the rath served both for a shelter and a defence. I might adduce many passages to prove this, but I will content myself with two—one from the MS. Harl. 5280, Brit. Mus., quoted by O'Curry (Lect., p. 618):—"They then went forward until they entered a beautiful plain. And they saw a kingly rath, and a golden tree at its door; and they saw a splendid house in it, under a roof-tree of find-ruinē; thirty feet was its length." And the other from the tale of "The fate of the Children of Usnagh" (Atlantis, No. VI.), in which we find it stated that as Deirdre's mother "was passing over the floor of the house, the infant shrieked in her womb, so that it was heard all over the lis."

The circular form was not discontinued at the introduction of Christianity. The churches indeed were universally quadrangular, but this form was adopted only very slowly in the strongholds and dwellings of the chiefs and people. Circular duns and raths, after the old pagan fashion, continued to be erected down to the twelfth or thirteenth century. It is recorded in the "Wars of GG.," that Brian Borumha fortified or erected certain duns, fastnesses, and islands (i. e. crannoges), which are enumerated; and the remains of several of these are still to be seen, differing in no respect from the more ancient forts. Donagh Cairbreach O'Brien, the sixth in descent from Brian Borumha, erected, according to the "Cathreim Thoirdealbhaigh" (compiled in 1459, by John M'Grath), "a princely palace of a circular form, at Clonroad" (near Ennis); and the same authority states that Conchobhair na Siudainë, the son of Donogh, built at the same place a longphort of earth, as a residence for himself.

It is highly probable that originally the words lios, rath, dun, &c., were applied to different kinds of structures: but however that may be, they are at present, and have been for a long time, especially the two first, confounded one with another, so that it seems impossible to make a distinction. The duns indeed, as I shall explain further on, are usually pretty well distinguished from the lisses and raths; but we often find, even in old authorities, two of these terms, and sometimes the whole three, applied to the very same edifices.

In the following passage for instance, from the annotations of Tirechan, in the Book of Armagh, the terms lios and dun appear to be applied synonymously:—"Cummen and Breathán purchased Ochter-nAchid (upper field, supposed to be Oughteragh, a parish in the county Leitrim), with its appurtenances, both wood, and plain, and meadow, together with its lios and its garden. Half of this wood, and house, and dun, was mortmain to Cummen." (Petrie, R. Towers, p. 218). And some other terms also are used in the same manner; as for example, in case of the great enclosure at Tara, which is known by the two names, Rath-na-riogh, and Cathair-Crofinn.

Lios. The words lios [lis] and rath were applied to the circular mound or entrenchment, generally of earth, thrown up both as a fortification and a shelter round the level space on which the houses were erected; and accordingly they are often translated atrium by Latin writers. But though this is the usual application of these terms, both—and especially rath—were, and are, not unfrequently applied to the great high entrenched mounds which are commonly designated by the word dun. These forts are still very numerous through the country, and they are called lisses and raths to the present day. Their great numbers, and the very general application of the terms, may be judged of from the fact, that there are about 1400 townlands and villages dispersed through all parts of Ireland, whose names begin with the word Lis alone, and of course this is only a very small fraction of all the lisses in Ireland.

The name of Lismore, in Waterford, affords a good illustration of the application of this word; and its history shows that the early saints sometimes surrounded their habitations with circular lisses, after the fashion of their pagan ancestors. In the Life of St. Carthach, the founder, published by the Bollandists at the 14th of May, we are told that when the saint and his followers, after his expulsion from Raham, arrived at this place, which had previously been called Maghsciath [Ma-skee], the plain of the shield, they began to erect a circular entrenchment. Then a certain virgin, who had a little cell in the same field, came up and inquired what they were doing; and St. Carthach answered her that they were preparing to construct a little enclosure or lis around their goods, for the service of God. And the holy virgin said, "It will not be little, but great." "The holy father, Mochuda (i. e. Carthach) answered—'Truly it will be as thou sayest, thou handmaid of Christ; for from this name the place will be always called in Scotie, Liassmor, or in Latin, Atrium-magnum,'' i. e. great lis or enclosure. There are altogether eleven places in Ireland called by this name Lismore.

Many local names are formed by the union of the term lios with a personal name; the individual commemorated being either the builder of the lis, or one of its subsequent possessors. Listowel, in Kerry, is called by the Four Masters, Lios-Tuathail, Tuathal's or Thoohal's fort; Liscannor, in Clare. Canar's; Liscarrol, in Cork, Carroll's, or Cearbhall's; Liscahane, in the parish of Ardfert, Kerry, called in the annals, Lios-Cathain, Cathan's or Kane's lis.

Or if not by name, we have a person commemorated in some other way: as, for instance, in Lisalbanagh, in Londonderry, the Scotchman's lis; Lisataggart, in Cavan, of the priest; Lisnabantry, in the same county, the lis of the widow (Lios-na-baintreabh-aighe); Lissadill, in the parish of Drumcliff, Sligo, which the Four Masters write Lios-an-doill, the fort of the blind man, the same name as Lissadoill, in Galway; Lissanearla, near Tralee, the earl's fort.

This word, as may be seen by the preceding examples, is not much subject to change by corruption: the nominative form is almost always made lis or liss. The genitive leasa found in the end of names, which would be properly anglicised, as it is pronounced, lassa, is generally not so correctly preserved. We find it in such names as Gortalassa, the field of the lis; Knockalassa (hill); Ballinlass, Ballinliss, Ballinlassa, and Ballinlassy, the town of the fort; all widely-spread townland names.

The two diminutives liosán and lísín [lissaun, lish-een], little fort, are very common. The latter is usually made Lisheen, which is the name of twenty townlands, and helps to form many others. It assumes a different form in Lissen, or Lissen Hall, the name of a place near Swords, in Dublin, and of another in the parish of Kilmore, Tipperary. Liosán appears in Lissan and Lissane, which are the names of several townlands and parishes. The Irish plural appears in Lessany (little forts), in Mayo; and the English in Lessans, near Saintfield, in Down. It occurs in combination in Mellison, in Tipperary, which is called in Irish, Magh-liosáin, the plain of the little lis, and in Ballylessan, in Down and Antrim, the town of the little fort.

With the adjective dur prefixed, signifying "strong," the compound durlas is formed, which means, according to O'Donovan, strong fort (Sup. to O'Reilly's Dict. in voce). Several great forts in different parts of the country are called by this name, one of the finest of which is situated in the parish of Kilruan, Tipperary; it is surrounded by three great entrenchments, and contains within it the ruins of a small ancient church. It is now called Rath-durlais in Irish, and gives name to the townland of Rathurles. Several places derive their names from this word durlas, the best known of which is the town of Thurles, in Tipperary, which was often called Durlas-O'Fogarty, from its situation in O'Fogarty's country; but whether the fort remains or not, I cannot tell. Durlless, another form, is the name of a townland in Mayo, and of two others in Tyrone.

Rath. This term has been explained in conjunction with lios, at page 249: in the Book of Armagh, rath is translated fossa. In a great number of cases this word is preserved in the anglicised names, exactly as it is spelled in Irish; namely, in the form of rath, which forms or begins the names of about 700 townlands. The townland of Rathurd, near Limerick, is now called in Irish Rath-tSuid, but by the annalists Rath-arda-Suid, the ford of Sord's height, Sord being a man's name. The Four Masters record the erection of this rath, by one of Heber's chieftains, in A. M. 3501; and its remains are still to be seen on the top of Rathurd hill, near the old castle. Rathnew, in Wicklow, is called in Irish authorities, Rath-Naoi, the latter part of which is a man's name, possibly the original possessor. Rathdrum, also in Wicklow, means the rath of the drum, or long hill, and there are several other places of the same name in different parts of Ireland; for raths were often built on the tops of low hills.

Rathmore, great fort, is the name of forty townlands in different counties. The great fortification that gave name to Rathmore, near the town of Antrim, still exists, and is famous for its historical associations. It is the Rath-mor-Muighe-Lině (great rath of Moylinny) of our historians; Tighernach notices it as existing in the second century; and in the seventh it was the residence of the princes of Dalairia. It was burned in the year 1315 by Edward Bruce, which shows that even then it was an important residence (Reeves, Eccl. Ant., p. 280). The rath also remains at Rathmore, four miles east of Naas, in Kildare.

Rath is in Irish pronounced raw, and in modern names it takes various phonetic forms, to correspond with this pronunciation, such as ra, rah, ray, &c., which syllables, as representatives of rath, begin the names of about 400 townlands. Raheny, near Dublin, is called by the annalists Rath-Enna, the fort of Enna, a man's name, formerly common in Ireland; the circumvallations of the old fort are still distinctly traceable round the Protestant church, which was built on its site. The village of Ardara, in Donegal, takes its name from a conspicuous rath on a hill near it, to which the name properly belongs, in Irish Ard-a'-raith, the height of the rath. Drumragh, a parish in Tyrone, containing the town of Omagh, is called in Irish Druim-ratha, the ridge or hill of the rath. The word occurs singly as Raigh, in Galway and Mayo; Raw, with the plural Raws, in several of the Ulster counties; and Ray, in Donegal and Cavan.

Other modern modifications and compounds are exhibited in the following names:—Belra, in Sligo, Belragh, near Carnteel, in Tyrone, and Belraugh, in Londonderry, all meaning the mouth or entrance of the fort; Corray, in the parish of Kilmacteige, Sligo, Cor-raith, the round hill of the rath. Roemore, in the parish of Breaghwy, Mayo, is called Rahemore in an Inquisition of James I., which shows it to be a corruption of Rathmore, great fort; and there is another Roemore, in the parish of Kilmeena, same county. Raharney, in Westmeath, preserves an Irish personal name of great antiquity, the full name being Rath-Athairne, Aharny's fort.

The diminutive Raheen (little fort), and its plural, Raheens, are the names of about eighty townlands, and form part of many others. There are six townlands called Raheenroe, little red rath: the little fort which gave name to Raheenroe, near Ballyorgan, in the south of Limerick, has been levelled within my own memory.

Dun. The primary meaning of the word dun is "strong" or "firm," and it is so interpreted in Zeuss, page 30:—"Dun, firmus, fortis." In this sense it forms a part of the old name of Dunluce castle, near the Giant's Causeway—Dunlios, as it is called in all Irish authorities. Dunlios signifies strong fort, and this name shows that the rock on which the castle ruins stand was in old times occupied by a fortified lis. It has the same signification in Dunchladh [Dun-claw], i. e. fortified mound or dyke, the name of the ancient boundary rampart between Brefny and An-naly, extending from Lough Gowna to Lough Kin-clare, in Longford; a considerable part of this ancient entrenchment is still to be seen near Granard, and it is now well known by the anglicised name of Duncla.

As a verb, the word dun is used in the sense of "to close," which is obviously derived from its adjectival signification; and this usage is exemplified in Corragunt, the name of a place in Fermanagh, near Clones, which is a corruption from the Irish name, Corra-dhunta (change of dh to g, page 52), i. e. closed or shut up weir.

Dun, as a noun, signifies a citadel or fortified residence; in the Zeuss MSS. it glosses arx and castrum, and Adamnan translates it munitio. It is found in the Teutonic as well as in the Keltic languages—Welsh, din; Anglo-Saxon, tûn; old high German, zun. It is represented in English by the word town; and it is the same as the termination dunum, so common in the old Latinized names of many of the cities of Great Britain and the Continent.

This word was anciently, and is still, frequently applied to the great forts, with a high central mound, flat at top, and surrounded by several—very usually three—earthen circumvallations. These fortified duns, so many of which remain all over the country, were the residences of the kings and chiefs; and they are constantly mentioned as such in the Irish authorities. Thus we read in the Feast of Dun-na-ngedh (Battle of Maghrath, p. 7), that Domhnall, son of Aedh, king of Ireland from A. D. 624 to 639, "first selected Dun-na-ngedh, on the bank of the Boyne, to be his habitation, and he formed seven very great ramparts around this dun, after the model of the houses of Tara." And other passages to the same effect are cited at page 246 et seq.

In modern names, dun generally assumes the forms dun, doon, or don; and these syllables form the beginning of the names of more than 600 townlands, towns, and parishes.

There are twenty-seven different places called Doon; one of them is the village and parish of Doon, in Limerick, where was situated the church of St. Fintan; the fort from which the place received the name still remains, and was anciently called Dunblesque. Dunamon, now a parish in Galway, was so called from a castle of the same name on the Suck; but the name, which the annalists write Dun-Iomghain, Imgan's fort, was anciently applied to a dun, which is still in part preserved. Dundonnell, i. e. Donall's or Domhnall's fortress, is the name of a townland in Roscommon, and of another in Westmeath; in Down it is modified, under Scottish influence, to Dundonald, which is the name of a parish, so called from a fort that stands not far from the church.

The name of Dundalk was originally applied not to the town, but to the great fortress now called the moat of Castletown, a mile inland; there can be no doubt that this is the Dun-Dealgan of the ancient histories and romances, the residence of Cuchullin, chief of the Red Branch Knights in the first century. In some of the tales of the Leabhar na huidhre, it is called Dun-Delca, but in later authorities, Dun-Dealgan, i. e. Delga's fort; and according to O'Curry, it received its name from Delga, a Firbolg chief who built it. There is a townland near Lisburn, now called Duneight, but written Downeagh in an Inquisition of James I., which has been identified by Dr. Reeves with the place called in the "Circuit of Ireland," Dun-Eachdhach, Eochy's fortress.

A great number of these duns, as will be seen from the preceding, have taken their names from persons, either the original founders or subsequent possessors. But various other circumstances, in connexion with these structures, were seized upon to form names. Doneraile, in Cork, is called in the Book of Lismore, Dun-air-aill, the fortress on the cliff, but whether the dun is still there I cannot tell. There is a parish in Waterford, whose name has nearly the same signification, viz.:—Dunhill, which is in Irish Dun-aille, the fortress of the cliff; it is understood to have taken its name from a rock on which a castle now stands; but a dun evidently preceded the castle, and was really the origin of the name. Dunally, in the parish of Calry, Sligo (an ancient residence of the O'Donnells), which the Four Masters write Dun-aile, and which is also the name of several townlands in Sligo and Galway, is the same name, but more correctly rendered.

Of similar origin to these is Dundrum, in Down, which the Four Masters mention by the name of Dundroma, the fort on the ridge or long hill; the original fort has however disappeared, and its site is occupied by the well-known castle ruins. There are several other places called Dundrum, all of which take their name from a fort built on a ridge; the ancient fort of Dundrum, near Dublin, was most probably situated on the height where the church of Taney now stands.

Although the word dun is not much liable to be disguised by modern corruption, yet in some cases it assumes forms different from those I have mentioned.

The town of Downpatrick takes its name from the large entrenched dun which lies near the Cathedral. In the first century this fortress was the residence of a warrior of the Red Branch Knights, called Celtchair, or Keltar of the battles; and from him it is variously called in Irish authorities Dunkeltar, Rathkeltar, and Araskeltar (aras, a habitation). By ecclesiastical writers it is commonly called Dun-leth-glas, or Dunda-leth-glas; this last name is translated, the dun of the two broken locks or fetters, which Jocelin accounts for by a legend—that the two sons of Dichu (see p. 105), having been confined as hostages by king Laeghaire, they were removed from the place of their confinement, and the two fetters by which they were bound were broken by miraculous agency. “Afterwards, for brevity’s sake, the latter part of this long name was dropped, and the simple word Dun retained, which has passed into the Latin Dunum, and into the English Down” (Reeves, Eccl. Ant., p. 143). The name of St. Patrick was added, as a kind of distinctive term, and as commemorative of his connexion with the place.

Down is the name of several places in King’s County and Westmeath; and the plural Downs (i. e. forts) is still more common. The name of the Glen of the Downs, in Wicklow, is probably a translation of the Irish Gleann-na-ndun, the Glen of the duns or forts. Downamona, in the parish of Kilmore, Tipperary, signifies the fort of the bog.

Dooneen, little fort, and the plural Dooneens, are the names of nearly thirty townlands in the south and west; they are often made Downing and Downings, in Cork, Carlow, Wicklow, and Kildare; and Downeen occurs once near Ross Carbery, in Cork.

The diminutive in an is not so common, but it gives name to some places, such as Doonan, three townlands in Antrim, Donegal, and Fermanagh; Doonane, in Queen's county and Tipperary; and Doonans (little forts), in the parish of Armoy, Antrim.

There are innumerable names all over the country, containing this word as a termination. There is a small island, and also a townland, near Dungarvan, called Shandon, in Irish, Seandun, old fort; and there is little doubt that this fortress was situated on the island. This name is better known, however, as that of a church in Cork, celebrated in Father Prout's melodious chanson :—

“The bells of Shandon,
That sound so grand on
The pleasant waters of the river Lee.”

The name reminds us of the time when the hill, now teeming with city life, under the shadow of the church, was crowned by the ancient fortress, which looked down on St. Finbar's infant colony, in the valley beneath. Shannon, in the parish of Calry, Sligo, and Shannon, in Donegal, near Lifford, are both, no doubt, from the same original, having the d aspirated.

We sometimes find two of the terms, lios, rath, and dun, combined in one name; and in this case, either the first is used adjectively, like dun in Dunluce (p. 254), or it is a mere explanatory term, used synonymously with the second. Or such a name might originate in successive structures, like the old name of Caher, in Tipperary, for which see p. 262 infra. Of the union of two terms, we have a good illustration in Lisdoonvarna, in the north-west of Clare, well known for its spa; which takes its name from a large fort on the right of the road as you go from Ballyvaughan to Ennistymon. The proper name of this is Doonvarna (Dun-bhearnach), gapped fort, from its shape; and the word Lis was added as a generic term, somewhat in the same manner as "river," in the expression "the river Liffey;" Lisdoonvarna, i. e. the lis (of) Doonvarna. In this way came also the name of Lisdown, in Armagh, and Lisdoonan, in Down and Monaghan. The word bearnach, gapped, is not unfrequently applied to a fort, referring, not to its original form, but to its dilapidated appearance, when the clay had been removed by the peasantry, so as to leave breaches or gaps in the circumvallations. Hence the origin of such names as Rathbarna, in Roscommon, and Caherbarnagh, in Clare, Cork, and Kerry.

One of the most obvious means of fortifying a fort was to flood the external ditch, when the construction admitted it, and the water was at hand; and whoever is accustomed to examine these ancient structures, must be convinced that this plan was often adopted. In many cases the old channel may be traced, leading from an adjacent stream or spring; and not unfrequently the water still remains in its place in the fosse.

The names themselves often prove the adoption of this mode of defence, or rather the existence of the water in its original position, long after the fort had been abandoned. There are twenty-eight townlands called Lissaniska, and Lissanisky, chiefly in the southern half of Ireland—Lios-an-uisge, the fort of the water. None of these are in Ulster, but the same name occurs as Lisanisk, in Monaghan, Lisanisky, in Cavan, and Lisnisk and Lisnisky, in Antrim, Down, and Armagh. With the same signification, we find Rathaniska, the name of a place in Westmeath; Raheenaniska, and Raheenanisky, in Queen's county;

Rahaniska, and Rahanisky, in Clare, Tipperary, and Cork; and in the last-mentioned county there is a parish called Dunisky.

Long after the lisses and raths had been abandoned as dwellings, many of them were turned to different uses; and we see some of the high duns and mounds, crowned with modern buildings, such as those at Drogheda, Naas, and Castletown, near Dundalk. The peasantry have always felt the greatest reluctance to putting them under tillage; and in every part of Ireland, you will hear stories of the calamities that befel the families or the cattle of the foolhardy farmers, who outraged the fairies' dwellings, by removing the earth or tilling the enclosure.

They were, however, often used as pens for cattle, for which some of them are admirably adapted; and we have, consequently, many such names as Lisnageeragh, and Rathnageeragh, the fort of the sheep; Lisnagree and Lisnagry (Lios-na-ngroidh), of the cattle; Lisnagowan, the lis of the calves, &c.

Cathair. This word, which is pronounced caher, appears to have been originally applied to a city, for the old form cathir glosses civitas in the Wb. MS. of Zeuss. It has been, however, from a very early period—perhaps from the beginning—used to designate a circular stone fort; it is applied to both in the present spoken language.

These ancient buildings are still very common throughout the country, especially in the south and west, where the term was in most general use; and they have given names to great numbers of places. In modern nomenclature the word usually takes one of the two forms, caher and cahir; and there are more than 300 townlands and towns whose names begin with one or the other of these two words, all in Munster and Connaught, except three or four in Leinster—none in Ulster.

Caher itself is the name of more than thirty townlands, in several of which the original structures are still standing. The stone fort that gave name to Caher, in Tipperary, was situated in the rocky island now occupied by the castle, which has of course obliterated every vestige of the previous edifice. Its full name, as used by the Four Masters and other authorities, was Cathair-duna-iascaigh [eesky], the circular stone fortress of the fish-abounding dun; from which it is obvious, "that an earthen dun had originally occupied the site on which a caher or stone fort was erected subsequently." (Petrie, "Irish Penny Journal," p. 257.) I think it is equally evident that before the erection of the caher its name was Dun-iascaigh [Duneesky], the fish-abounding dun, and indeed the Four Masters once (at 1581) give it this appellation. Dr. Petrie goes on to say:—"The Book of Lecan records the destruction of the caher by Cuirreach, the brother-in-law of Felimy the Law-giver, as early as the third century, at which time it is stated to have been the residence of a female named Badamar."

Cahersiveen, in Kerry, retains the correct pronunciation of the Irish name, Cathair-Saidhbhin, the stone fort of Saidhbhin or Sabina. Saidhbhin is the diminutive of Sadhbh [Sauv], a woman's name, formerly in very general use, which in latter times has been commonly changed to Sarah. Caherconlish, in Limerick, must have received its name, like Caher, in Tipperary, from the erection of a stone fort near an older earthen one; its Irish name being Cathair-chinn-lis (Annals of Innisfallen), the caher at the head of the lis. The ruins of the original stone fort that gave name to Cahermurphy, in the parish of Kilmihil, Clare, still remain: the Four Masters call it Cathair-Murchadha, Murrough's caher. The whitish colour of the stones has given the name of Cahergal (Cathair-geal, white caher) to many of these forts, from which again eleven townlands in Cork, Waterford, Galway, and Mayo, have derived their names.

Cahereen, little caher, is the name of a place near Castleisland, in Kerry. The genitive of cathair is catharach [caheragh], and this forms the latter part of a number of names; for example, there is a place near Dunmanway, and another near Kenmare, called Derrynacaheragh, the oak wood of the stone fort.

Caiseal. Cormac Mac Cullenan, in his Glossary, conjectures that the name of Cashel, in Tipperary, is derived from Cis-ail, i. e. tribute-rent; the same derivation is given in the Book of Rights; while O'Clery and other Irish authorities propose Cios-ail, rent-rock—the rock on which the kings of Munster received their rents; for Cashel was once the capital city of Munster, and the chief residence of its kings. There can be no doubt that all this is mere fancy, for the word caiseal is very common in Irish, and is always used to signify a circular stone fort; it is a simple word, and either cognate with, or, as Ebel asserts, derived from, the Latin castellum; and it is found in the most ancient Irish MSS., such as those of Zeuss, Cormac's Glossary, &c.

Moreover, in the modern form, Cashel, it is the name of about fifty townlands, and begins the names of about fifty others, every one of which was so called from one of these ancient stone forts; and there is no reason why Cashel in Tipperary should be different from the others. As a further proof that this is its real signification, it is translated maceria in a charter of A. D. 1004, which is entered in the Book of Armagh (Reeves's Adamnan, p. 75). About the beginning of the fifth century, Corc, king of Munster, took possession of Cashel, and there can be little doubt that he erected a stone fort on the rock now so well known for its ecclesiastical ruins, for we are told that he changed its name from sidh-dhruim (fairy ridge) to Caiseal. The cashels belong to the same class as cahers, raths, &c., and like them are of pagan origin; but the name was very often adopted in Christian times, to denote the wall with which the early saints surrounded their establishments.

Cashels, and places named from them, are scattered over the four provinces, but they preponderate in the western and north-western counties. Cashelfean, in Cork, and Donegal, and Cashelnavean, near Stranorlar in the latter county, both signify the stone fort of the Fianna, or ancient Irish militia (see p. 84); Cashelfinoge, near Boyle, in Roscommon, the fort of the scald crows. Sometimes this word is corrupted to castle, as we find in Ballycastle, in Mayo, the correct name of which would be Ballycashel, for it is called in Irish Baile-an-chaisil, the town of the cashel; but the name of Ballycastle, in Antrim, is correct, for it was so called, not from a cashel, but from a castle. Castledargan, in the parish of Kilross, Sligo, is similarly corrupted, for the Four Masters call it Caiseal-Locha-Deargain, the stone fort of Lough Dargan.

Brugh and Bruighean. Brugh [bru] signifies a palace or distinguished residence. Its primary meaning seems to be a hill; afterwards it was applied to a fortified residence on a hill, and next to any great mansion. The word descends from the most ancient times, and "it appears in the German, Keltic, and Slavonic languages with the general acceptance of mountain, height, little hill, summit, but under forms slightly altered by a forgetfulness of its original. Ang. Sax., beorg; Scand., berg; O. H. German, perg; Irish, brigh, a mountain; Cymr., brig, the same: Whence the word brigand (literally), a mountaineer, and the name of the ancient Brigantes" (Pictet, Origines, Vol. I., p. 126). Pictet believes that brigh (which in Irish is now applied only to a hill) is the original word, and that brugh was derived from it, by the change of i to u, through the retroactive influence of the termination in the ancient form brighu.

This term was applied to many of the royal residences of Ireland; and several of the places that have preserved the word in their names, have also preserved the old brughs or raths themselves. Bruree, on the river Maigue, in Limerick, is a most characteristic example. Its proper name, as it is found in many Irish authorities, is Brugh-righ, the fort or palace of the king; for it was the principal seat of Oilioll Olum, king of Munster in the second century (see p. 125), and afterwards of the O'Donovans, chiefs of Hy Carbery, i. e. of the level country round Bruree and Kilmallock. In the Book of Rights, it is mentioned first in the list of the king of Cashel's seats, and there are still remaining extensive earthen forts, the ruins of the ancient brugh or palace of Oilioll Olum and his successors. According to an ancient MS. quoted by O'Curry (Battle of Moylena, p. 72), the most ancient name of this place was Dun-Cobh-thaigh, or Duncoffy, Coffagh's dun; which proves that it was a fortified residence before its occupation by Oilioll Olum.

The present name of Bruff, in Limerick, is a corruption of Brugh (see p. 49). It is now called in Irish Brubh-na-leise, in which both terms are corrupted, the correct name being Brugh-na-Deisē, i. e. the brugh or mansion of the ancient territory of Deis beg; and from the first part, Brubh [bruv], the modern form Bruff is derived. The brugh that gave name to this place still exists; it is an earthen fort near the town, called at the present day by the people, Lisín-a'-Bhrogħa, as in the old song "Binn lisín aerach a' Bhrogħa," "The melodious airy little lis of Bruff." There is a place called Bruff in the parish of Aghamore, Sligo, which is also from the same word brugh.

In some parts of the country they use the form brughas [bruas], which has originated the names of Bruis, now a parish in Tipperary; Bruce, two townlands in Wexford; and Bruse, two others in Cavan. There is also a derivative brughachas [brughas], which, as well as brugh itself, is used in several places to denote a farmhouse, and the former is pretty common in this sense, in some of the Ulster counties. We derive from it Brughas, the name of a townland in Armagh, and of another in Fermanagh; and Drumbrughas, the ridge of the farmhouse, a name of frequent occurrence in Cavan and Fermanagh.

The diminutive bruighean [breean] signifying also a royal mansion, or great house, is even more common than its original. Both brugh and bruighean were often used to signify a house of public hospitality, whence the term brughaidh [broo-ey], the keeper of such a house—a farmer. There was a celebrated house of this kind on the river Dodder, two miles south of Tallaght, in Dublin, called Bruighean-Da-Derga, from Da-Derga, its owner. This mansion was destroyed by a band of pirates, about a hundred years before the Christian era, and they also slew the monarch, Conary-more, who was enjoying the hospitality of Da-Derga. Its destruction, and the death of the monarch, are mentioned in our oldest authorities, such as the Leabhar-na-hUidhre, &c.; no remains of the old fort can now be discovered, but it has left its name on the townland of Bohernabreena, which is the phonetic representative of Bóthar-na-Bruighne, the road of the bruighean or mansion.

Another mansion of the same kind, equally renowned, was Bruighean-Da-Choga, which was situated in the present county Westmeath. This was stormed and destroyed in the first century, and Cormac Conloingeas, son of Conor mac Nessa (see p. 116), who had stopped there to rest on his journey from Connaught to Ulster, was slain. The ancient Ballybetagh attached to this house is now subdivided into four townlands, situated in the parish of Drumrany, two of them called Bryanmore, and two, Bryanbeg; in which Bryan represents the present pronunciation of Bruighean. The old mansion itself still remains, and is situated in Bryanmore Upper; it is a fort about 200 feet in diameter, containing within its circle the ruins of an Anglo-Norman castle; and it was formerly surrounded by a circle of upright stones.

In more recent times, the word bruighean has been always used by the people to denote a fairy palace—for the old forts were believed to be inhabited by the fairies;—and in this sense it is generally understood in its application to local names. The form bryan is found in some other names besides these in Westmeath; such as Bryan (-beg and -more), near Aughrim, in Roscommon. Breen, which well represents the original sound, is the name of three townlands in Antrim, Donegal, and Tyrone; and there is a place in Limerick, north of Kilfinnane, and another near Emly, in Tipperary, called Ballinvreena, the town of the fairy mansion. The double diminutive Breenaun occurs in the parish of Ross, Galway; and we find Breenagh—a place abounding in fairy mansions—in the parish of Conwal, Donegal. The diminutive in óg occurs once in Sligo, giving name to Breeoge, in the parish of Kilmacowen—Bruigheóg, little brugh or fort.

Mota.—The large high mounds are often called mota in Irish, the same as the English word moat. It is the opinion of the best Irish scholars, and among others, O'Donovan, that it is not an original Irish word at all, for it is not found in any ancient authority; it is very probably nothing more than the English word moat, or perhaps the Anglo-Saxon mote, borrowed, like many others, into the Irish.

We find a few names in the annals, formed from this word. The Four Masters mention Mountgarret, now a ruined castle on the Barrow, near New Ross, once a residence of the Butlers; and they call it Mota-Gaired, Garret's moat, which shows that the place should have been called Moatgarret. Ballymote, in Sligo, also occurs in the Four Masters, in the Irish form Baile-an-mhota, the town of the moat.

There are many townlands called Moat and Mota, which derive their names from this word, and in numerous cases the mounds are still preserved. The great mound of Moate, in Westmeath, forms a very conspicuous feature; it is called Moategranoge; and this name it derived, according to tradition, from Grainė-og, young Grainė or Grace, a Munster lady who married one of the O'Melaghlin's. She is probably the person commemorated in the legend referred to by Cæsar Otway;—"a legend concerning a Milesian princess taking on herself the office of brehon, and from this moat adjudicating causes, and delivering her oral laws to the people" (Tour in Connaught, p. 55).

Grianan. — The word grianan [greenan] is explained by O'Donovan (App. to O'Reilly's Dict., in voce), 1. a beautiful, sunny spot; 2. a bower or summer house; 3. a balcony or gallery (on a house); 4. a royal palace. Its literal meaning is a sunny spot, for it is derived from grian, the sun; and the Irish-Latin writers often translate it solarium, and terra solaris. It is of frequent occurrence in the most ancient Irish MSS., principally in the third and fourth senses; as for instance in Cormac's Glossary, where it is used as another name for "a palace on a hill." O'Brien explains it a royal seat, in which sense it is used by the best Irish writers; and this is unquestionably its general meaning, when it occurs in topographical names. The most common English forms of the word are Greenan, Greenane, Greenaun, and Grennan, which are the names of about forty-five townlands distributed over the four provinces.

The grianans are generally the same kind of structures as the cahers, brughs, &c., already explained; and many of them still remain in the places whose names contain the word. The most celebrated palace of the name in Ireland was Greenan-Ely, of which I will speak under Aileach. Grenanstown, in Tipperary, five miles from Nenagh, has got its present name by translation from Baile-an-ghrianain, the town of the palace; the grianan is evidently the great fort now called Lisrathdine, which appears to have been an important place, as it is very large, and has three circumvallations. The name of the fort has been formed like that of Lisdoonvarna (p. 259); Lisrathdine, i. e. the fort of Rathdine, this last signifying deep rath (Rath-doimhin), in allusion to the depth of the fosses. Clogrennan castle, the ruins of which are situated on the Barrow, three miles below Carlow, must have been built on the site of a more ancient residence, as the name sufficiently attests—Cloch-grian-ain, the stone castle of the grianan.

It will be perceived that grianan is a diminutive from grian; the other diminutive in óg sometimes occurs also, and is understood to mean a sunny little hill. We find Greenoge, a village and parish in Meath; and this is also the name of a townland near Rathcoole, Dublin, and of another near Dromore, in Down.

Aileach.—The circular stone fortresses already described under the words cathair and caiseal, were often called by the name aileach [ellagh], a word which signifies literally a stone house or stone fort, being derived from ail, a stone. Michael O'Clery, in his Glossary of ancient Irish words, gives this meaning and derivation:—" Aileach or ailtheach, i. e. a name for a habitation, which (name) was given from stones."

Aileach is well known to readers of Irish history as the name of the palace of the northern Hy Neill kings, which is celebrated in the most ancient Irish writings under various names, such as Aileach Neid, Aileach Frighrinn, &c. The ruins of this great fortress, which are situated on a hill, four miles northwest from Derry, have been elaborately described in the Ordnance memoir of the parish of Templemore; they consist of a circular cashel of cyclopean masonry, crowning the summit of the hill, surrounded by three concentric ramparts. It still retains its old name, being called Greenan-Ely, i. e. the palace of Aileach, for Ely represents the pronunciation of Ailigh, the genitive of Aileach; and it gives name to the two adjacent townlands of Elaghmore and Elaghbeg.

Elagh is also the name of two townlands in Tyrone, and there are several places in Galway and Mayo called Ellagh, all derived from a stone fort. In Caherelly, the name of a parish in Limerick, there is a union of two synonymous terms, the Irish name being Cathair-ailigh, the caher of the stone fort. A stone fort must have existed on a ridge in Drumanallig, a townland near Inchageelagh, in Cork; and another on the promontory called Ardelly, in Erris, which Mac Firbis, in "Hy Fiachrach," calls Ard-Ailigh.

Teamhair. The name of Tara, like that of Cashel, has been the subject of much conjecture, and our old etymologists have also in this instance committed the mistake of seeking to decompose what is in reality a simple term. The ancient name of Tara is Teamhair, and several of our old writers state that it was so called from Tea, the wife of Heremon, who was buried there:—Teamhair, i. e. the mur or wall of Tea. But this derivation is legendary, for Teamhair was, and is still, a common local name.

Teamhair [Tower] is a simple word, and has pretty much the same meaning as grianan (see p. 269); it signifies an elevated spot commanding an extensive prospect, and in this sense it is frequently used as a generic term in Irish MSS. In Cormac's Glossary it is stated that the teamhair of a house is a grianan (i. e. balcony), and that the teamhair of a country is a hill commanding a wide view. This meaning applies to every teamhair in Ireland, for they are all conspicuously situated; and the great Tara, in Meath, is a most characteristic example. Moreover, it must be remembered that a teamhair was a residence, and that all the teamhairs had originally one or more forts, which in case of many of them remain to this day.

The genitive of teamhair is teamhrach [taragh or towragh], and it is this form which has given its present name to Tara, in Meath, and to every other place whose name is similarly spelled (see p. 31). By the old inhabitants, however, all these places are called in Irish Teamhair. Our histories tell us that when the Firbolgs came to Tara, they called the hill Druim-caoin [Drumkeen], beautiful ridge; and it was also called Liath-dhruim [Leitrim], grey ridge. There is a place called Tara in the parish of Witter, Down, and another in the parish of Durrow, King's County; and Tara is the name of a conspicuous hill near Gorey, in Wexford, on the top of which there is a carn.

There was a celebrated royal residence in Munster, called Teamhair-Luachra, from the district of Sliabh Luachra, or Slievelougher. Its exact situation is now unknown, though it is probable that the fort is still in existence; but it must have been somewhere near Ballahantouragh, a ford giving name to a townland near Castleisland, in Kerry, which is called in Irish Bel-atha-an-Teamhrach, the ford-mouth of the Teamhair. A similar form of the name is found in Knock-auntouragh, a little hill near Kildorrery, in Cork, on the top of which is a fort—the old Teamhair—celebrated in the local legends.

There are many other places deriving their names from these teamhairs, and to understand the following selection, it must be remembered that the word is pronounced tavver, tawer, and tower, in different parts of the country. One form is found in Towerbeg and Towermore, two townlands in the parish of Devenish, Fermanagh; and there is a Towermore near Castlelyons, in Cork. Taur, another modification, gives name to two townlands (-more and -beg), in the parish of Clonfert, same county. Tawran, little Teamh- air (Teamhrán), occurs in the parish of Killaraght, Sligo; we find the same name in the slightly different form Tavraun, in the parish of Kilmovee, Mayo; while the diminutive in ín gives name to Tevrin, in the parish of Rathconnell, Westmeath.

Faithche. In front of the ancient Irish residences, there was usually a level green plot, used for various purposes—for games and exercises of different kinds, for the reception of visitors, &c. Faithche [faha] was the name applied to this green; the word is translated platea in Cormac's Glossary; and it is constantly used by ancient Irish writers, who very frequently mention the faithche in connexion with the king's or chieftain's fort. For instance, in the feast of Dun-na-ingedh it is related that a visitor "reached Aileach Neid (see p. 270 supra), where the king held his residence at that time. The king came out upon the faithche, surrounded by a great concourse of the men of Erin; and he was playing chess amidst the host." (Battle of Moyrath, p. 36.)

The word is, and has been, used to denote a hurling field, or fair green, or any level green field in which meetings were held or games celebrated, whether in connexion with a fort or not; in the Irish version of Nennius, for instance, it is applied to a hurling green. In Connaught, at the present time, it is universally understood to mean simply a level green field.

The word enters pretty extensively into names, and it is generally made Fahy and Faha, the former being more usual in Connaught, and the latter in Munster; both together constitute the names of about thirty townlands. It enters into several compounds, such as Fahanasoodry, near Ballylanders, in Limerick, Faithche-na-súdaire, the green of the tanners, where tanning must have been carried on; Fahykeen, in Donegal, beautiful green.

The word takes various other forms, of which the following names will be a sufficient illustration. Faheeran, in the parish of Kilcomreragh, King's County, is a contraction of Faithche-Chiarain (Four Masters), Ciaran's green plot; Faiafannan, near Killybegs, Donegal, Fannan's green. It is made Foy in several places, as, for instance, near Rathangan, in Kildare; in Armagh we find Foyduff, Foybeg, and Foymore (black, little, great), and in Donegal, Foyfin, fair or whitish faithche. Foygh occurs in Longford and Tyrone; in Donegal we have Foyagh, and in Fermanagh, Fyagh, both meaning a place abounding in green plots.

The townland of Dunseverick, in Antrim, which takes its name from the well known castle, is also called Feigh, a name derived, no doubt, from the faithche of the ancient dun, which existed ages before the erection of the castle. The name Feigh occurs also in the south, but it is not derived from faithche. Ballynafoy, in Down, is the town of the green; the same name is found in Antrim, in the forms Ballynafeigh, Ballynafey, and Ballynafie; and in Kildare we find it as Ballynafagh.

The word occurs with three diminutives. Fahan, in Kerry, and Fahane, in Cork, both signify little faithche. Faheens (little green plots), is found in Mayo; and there is a lake not far from the town of Donegal, called Lough Foyhin, the lake of the little green. In Sligo we have Foyoges, and in Longford, Fihoges, both having the same meaning as Faheens.

Mothar. The ruin of a caher or rath is often designated in Munster by the term mothar [mōher]; and sometimes the word is applied to the ruin of any building. On a cliff near Hag's Head, on the western coast of Clare, there formerly stood, and perhaps still stands, an old caher or stone fort, called Moher-O'Ruan, O'Ruan's ruined fort; and this is the feature that gave name to the well known cliffs of Moher.

The word is used in the formation of local names pretty extensively in Munster and Connaught, and in two of the Ulster counties, Cavan and Fermanagh; while in Leinster I find only one instance in the Queen's County. Scattered over this area, Moher is the name of about twenty-five townlands, and it is found in combination in those of many others.

The plural Mohera (ruined forts), is the name of a townland near Castlelyons, in Cork; and we find the word in Moheracreevy, in Leitrim, the ruins of or near the large tree. In Cork also, near Rathcormick, is a place called Mohereen, little moher; and Moheragh, signifying a place abounding in mohers, occurs in the parish of Donohill, Tipperary. Moheranea, in Fermanagh, signifies the moher of the horse; and Drummohér in Clare, and Drommohér in Limerick, the ridge of the ruined fort.

Crannóg. The word crannóg, a diminutive formation from crann, a tree, means literally a wooden house; but the houses so called were generally placed on artificial islands in lakes. These islands were formed in a shallow part, by driving stakes into the bottom, which were made to support cross beams; and on these were heaped small trees, brambles, clay, &c., till the structure was raised over the surface of the water. On this the family, and in many cases several families, lived in wooden houses, sufficiently protected from enemies by the surrounding lake, while communication with the land was carried on by means of a small boat. The word crannóg was very often, and is now generally, understood, to mean the whole structure, both island and houses.

These lake dwellings were used from the most remote ages down to the sixteenth or seventeenth century, and they are frequently mentioned in the annals. The remains of many of them have been recently discovered, and have been examined and described by several archæologists. There are various places through the country whose names contain the word crannog, in most of which there was a lake, with an artificial island, though in some cases the lakes have disappeared.

Crannoge is the name of a townland near Pomeroy, in Tyrone; Cronoge, of another in Kilkenny; and in the parish of Cloonclare, Leitrim, is a place called Crannoge Island. Crannogeboy (yellow), in the parish of Inishkeel, Donegal, was once the residence of one of the O'Boyles. Coolcronoge, the corner or angle of the wooden house, is the name of a place in the parish of Ardagh, Limerick. There is a small lake near Ballingarry, in the north of Tipperary, called Loughnahinch (the lake of the island), in which there is a crannoge fifty feet in diameter, which gave name both to the lake and to the townland of Ballynahinch. The Four Masters mention eight crannoges in as many different parts of Ireland.

Longphort. This term is in frequent use, and generally signifies a fortress, but sometimes an encampment. The word was applied both to the old circular entrenched forts and to the more modern stone castles; and the fortresses bearing this designation have given name to all those places called Longford, of which there are about twenty. The town of Longford is called in the annals, Longford-O'Farrell, from the castle of the O'Farrells, the ancient proprietors, which, according to tradition, was situated where the military barrack now stands. The barony of Longford, in Roscommon, takes its name from Longford castle, in the parish of Tiranascragh.

In a few cases, the word is somewhat disguised in modern names, as in Lonart, near Killorglin, in Kerry, which is a mere softening of the sound of Longphort. Athlunkard is the name of a townland near Limerick, from which Athlunkard-street in the city derives its name; the correct anglicised form would be Athlongford, the ford of the fortress or encampment.

Teach. This word [pron. tagh] means a house of any kind, and is cognate with Lat. tectum; it was used both in pagan and Christian times, and has found its way extensively into local names. The best anglicised form is tagh, which is of frequent occurrence; as in Tagheen, a parish in Mayo, which is called in "Hy Fiachrach," Teach-chaoín, beautiful house; and Taghboy, a parish in Meath, yellow house. Sometimes the final guttural was omitted, as in Taduff, in Roscommon, black house.

The form tigh [tee] is however in more general use in the formation of names, than the nominative (see p. 31); and it usually appears as tee, ti, and ty. Teebane and Teemore (white and great house), are the names of several townlands in the northern counties; Tibraddan, near Dublin, and Tyone, near Nenagh, Braddan's and John's house.

When tigh is joined with the genitive of the article, it almost always takes the form of tin or tinna, which we find in the beginning of a great number of names. There is a small town in Carlow, and several townlands in Wicklow and Queen's County, called Tinna-hinch, which represents the Irish Tigh-na-hinnsē, the house of the island or river holm; Tincurragh and Tincurry, in Wexford and Tipperary, the house of the curragh or marsh; Tinnascart, in Cork and Waterford, and Tinnascarty, in Kilkenny, the house of the scart or cluster of bushes.

The site on which a house stood, is often denoted by the combination ait-tighe [aut-tee], literally "the place of a house;" in modern names it is almost always made atti or atty, which form the beginning of about sixty townland names, the latter part being very often the name of the former owner of the house. It occurs once in the Four Masters at 1256, where they mention a place called Ait-tighe-mic-Cuirrin, the site of Mac Currin's house.

Attidermot, near Aughrim in Galway, signifies the site of Dermot's house; Attykit, near Cashel, in Tipperary, of Ceat's or Ket's house. In a few cases, the compound is followed by some term characterising the house, as in Attiduff in Monaghan and Sligo, the site of the black house; Attatantee in Donegal, in Irish Ait-a'-tsean-tighe, the site of the old house. The word ait is sometimes used alone, to denote the site of anything, as in Atshanboe in Tipperary, the site of the old tent (Ait-sean-botha); Attavally, the name of three townlands in Mayo, the site of the bally or village.

From the general meaning of house, teach or tigh came to be used frequently in Christian times, to denote a church; and hence the word is often joined to the names of saints, to designate ecclesiastical foundations, which afterwards gave names to parishes and townlands. Examples of this occur in Chap. III. Part II, and I will add a few more here.

Taghadoe, a parish in Kildare, takes its name from an old church, which, however, has wholly disappeared, though a portion of the round tower still stands in the churchyard; the name is written by Irish authorities, Teach-Tuae, St. Tua's church. Tiaquin was originally the name of a primitive church in Galway, and it is written in Irish Tigh-Dachonna, St. Dachonna's house, from which the present name was formed by contraction, and by the aspiration of the D (see p. 19). A castle was erected there long afterwards, from which the barony of Tiaquin has been so called. Timahoe, in Queen's county, well known for its beautiful round tower, took its name (Tech-mochua, O'Clery's Cal.) from St. Mochua, the original founder and patron, who flourished in the sixth century. St. Munna or Fintan, who died in A. D. 634, founded a monastery in Wexford, which was called from him Teach-munna (Book of L.), St. Munna's house, now modernized to Taghmon; and the parish of Taghmon, in Westmeath, derived its name from the same saint. Tymon, the name of a place near Dublin, containing an interesting castle ruin, has the same signification as Taghmon, but whither the Munna whom it commemorates, is the same as St. Munna, of Taghmon, I cannot tell.

This word enters into various other combinations in local names. There is a townland in the parish of Lower Bodoney, Tyrone, called Crockatanty, whose Irish name is Cnoc-a'-tsean-tighe (see pp. 47 and 22 supra), the hill of the old house; and we see the same form in Tullantanty (Tulach a hill) in Cavan, which has also the same meaning. Edentirory, near Dromore, in Down, means the edan or hill brow of Rory's house.

Both [bõh]. This word signifies a tent, booth, or hut, and it was applied not only to the huts erected for human habitation, but also sometimes to cattle houses. It is an old word in the language, occurring very often in our ancient authorities; and the annals make mention of several places whose names were derived from these huts.

Templeshanbo, at the foot of Mount Leinster, in Wexford, was anciently called Seanboth [Shanbōh], old tent or hut, the prefix Temple having been added in recent times. It was also called Seanboth-Sinē, and Seanboth-Colmain, from St. Colman O'Fiachra, who was venerated there. Seanboth-Sinē, signifies the old tent of Sín [Sheen] a woman's name belonging to the pagan ages; and it is very probable that this was its original name, and that St. Colman, like many other Irish saints, adopted it without change. There is a Shanbo, in Meath, a Shanboe, in Queen's County; and Shanbogh is the name of a parish in Kilkenny—all different forms of the same word.

Bough, which is merely an adaptation of Both, is the name of a townland in Carlow, and of another in Monaghan. Raphoe, in Donegal, is called in the annals Rath-both, the fort of the huts; and in O'Clery's Calendar, Bodoney, in Tyrone, is called Both-domhnaigh, the tent of the church. There is an old church near Dungiven, in Londonderry, which in various Irish authorities is called Both-Mheidhbhe [Vēva], Maev's hut, an old pagan name, which is now modernised to Bovevagh. Bohola, a parish in Mayo, takes its name from a church now in ruins, which is called in "Hy Fiachrach," Both-Thola, St. Tola's tent; and in the parish of Templeniry, Tipperary, there is a townland called Montanavoe, in Irish, Mointeán-a'-bhoith, the boggy land of the tent.

We have the plural (botha) represented by Boho, a parish in Fermanagh, which is only a part of its name as given by the Four Masters, viz., the Botha or tents of Muintir Fialain, this last being the name of the ancient tribe who inhabited the district: Boha-boy, in Galway, yellow tents.

Almost all local names in Ireland beginning with Boh (except the Bohers), and those also that end with -boha, and -bohy, are derived from this word. Thus Bohullion, in Donegal, represents the Irish Both-chuillinn, the hut of the holly, i. e. surrounded with holly trees. Knockboha, a famous hill in the parish of Lackan, Mayo, is called in "Hy Fiachrach," Cnoc-botha, the hill of the hut; and Knocknaboha, in Limerick and Tipperary, has the same meaning.

There are two diminutives of this word, viz., bothán and bothóg [bohaun, bohoge], both of which are in very common use in the south and west of Ireland, even among speakers of English, to denote a cabin or hut of any kind. Bohaun is the name of four townlands in Galway and Mayo; and we find Bohanboy, (yellow little hut) in Donegal. The other, Bohoge, is the name of a townland in the parish of Manulla, Mayo.

Caislen. The word caislen or caislean [cashlaun] is applied to a castle; and like caiseal, it is evidently a loan word—a diminutive formation from the Latin castellum. Like the older duns, cahers, &c., these more modern structures gave names to numerous places, and the word is almost always represented by the English word castle.

Of the names containing this word, far the greater number are purely Irish, notwithstanding the English look of the word castle. Castlereagh is a small town in Roscommon, which gives name to a barony. The castle, of which there are now no remains, stood on the west side of the town, and it is called by the Four Masters, Caislen-riabhach, grey castle. There is a barony in Down of the same name, which was so called from an old castle, a residence of a branch of the O'Neills, which stood on a height in the town-land of Castlereagh, near Belfast; and some half dozen townlands in different counties are called by this name, so descriptive of the venerable appearance of an ancient castle.

In a few cases, the Irish form is preserved, as for example in Cashlan, the name of two townlands in Monaghan, and of one in Antrim; Cashlaundarragh, in Galway, the castle of the oak tree; Cashlancran, in Mayo, the castle of the trees.

Daingean. The word daingean [dangan] as an adjective, means strong; as a noun, it means a stronghold of any kind, whether an ancient circular fort, or a more modern fortress or castle; and it gives name to a considerable number of places. Dangan, which is the correct English form, is the name of a village in Kilkenny, and of a number of townlands, including Dangan, in Meath, once the residence of the Duke of Wellington. This was also the old name of Philipstown; the erection of "the castle of Daingean" is recorded by the Four Masters at 1546; but it is probable that the name is older than the castle, and that it had been previously borne by a circular fort.

Occasionally this word is anglicised Dingin, which is the name of a townland in Cavan; Dinginavanty, in the parish of Kildrumsherdan, in this county, means Mantagh's fortress. It is this form which has given origin to the modern name of Dingle, in Kerry, by the usual change of final l to n (Dingin, Dingil, Dingle: see p. 45). It is called in the annals, Daingean-ui-Chuis, now usually written Dingle-I-Coush, i. e. the fortress of O'Cush, the ancient proprietor before the English invasion. These people sometimes call themselves Hussey in English, and this is the origin of the mistaken assertion made by some writers, that the place received its name from the English family of Hussey.

In the north of Ireland, the ng in the middle of the word daingean, is pronounced as a soft guttural, which, as it is very faint, and quite incapable of being represented by English letters, is suppressed in modern spelling, thereby changing daingean to dian or some such form. There are some townlands called Dian and Dyan, in Tyrone and Monaghan; two in Armagh, and one in Down, called Lisadian, the lis of the stronghold. Even in Mayo, a pronunciation much the same is sometimes heard; and hence we have the name of Ballindine, a village in that county, the same as Ballindagny in Longford, Ballindaggan in Wexford, and Ballindangan near Mitchelstown in Cork, the town of the stronghold. Elsewhere in Mayo, however, the word retains its proper form, as in Killadangan, the wood of the fortress.

Badhun, or Badhbhdhun [bawn]. Beside many of the old castles, there was a bawn or large enclosure surrounded by a strong fence or wall, which was often protected by towers; and into this enclosure the cattle were driven by night to protect them from wolves or robbers. It corresponds to the faithche of the old pagan fortresses (see p. 273), and served much the same purposes; for as Smith remarks, speaking of the castle of Kilcrea, west of Cork, "the bawn was the only appendage formerly to great men's castles, which places were used for dancing, goaling, and such diversions * * * and for keeping cattle at night."

O'Donovan, writing in the "Ulster Journal of Archæology," says:—"The term bawn, which frequently appears in documents relating to Irish history since the plantation of Ulster, is the anglicised form of the Irish badhun, an enclosure or fortress for cows. It occurs seldom in Irish documents, the earliest mention of a castle so called being found in the "Four Masters" at 1547, viz. Badhun-Riaganach. From this forward it is met with in different parts of Ireland. In the more ancient Irish documents, a cow fortress is more usually called bo-dhaingean, but bo-dhun or badhun is equally correct. Sometimes written Badhbh-dhun, the fortress of Badhbh [Bauv], the Bellona of the ancient Irish, but this is probably a fanciful writing of it." This latter form, however, and its presumed derivation from the name of the old war goddess, receive some support from the fact, that in Ulster it is pronounced bauvan, in which the v plainly points to a bh in the Irish original; and this pronunciation is perpetuated in Bavan, the name of three townlands in Down, Cavan, and Louth.*

The bawns may still be seen near the ruins of many of the old castles through the country; and in some cases the surrounding wall, with its towers, remains in tolerable preservation. The syllable bawn is of very usual occurrence in local names, but as this is also the anglicised form of bán, a green field, it is often difficult to tell from which of the two Irish words it is derived, for badhun, and bán are pronounced nearly alike. The townland of Bawn, in the parish of Moydow, Longford, derives its name from the bawn of Moydow castle, whose ruins remain yet in the townland.

Lathrach. The site of anything is denoted by the

* Duaid Mac Firbis writes the word badhbh-dhun in "Hy-Fiachrach." Boa Island, in Lough Erne, is called by the Four Masters, Badhbha, while the natives call it Inis-Badhbhan, i. e. the island of Badhbh. Mr. W. M. Hennessy's elaborate paper—read a short time since—"On the War-Goddess of the Ancient Irish," is not yet published, and I regret not being able to avail myself of it to illustrate more fully this interesting subject.

word lathrach [lauragh], but this word is usually applied to the site of some sort of building. Lathrach senmuilind (H. 3. 18, T. C. D.), the site of an old mill. There are many places scattered through the four provinces called Laragh, and Lauragh, to which this word gives name, the best known being the village of Laragh, at the entrance to Glendalough. Laraghleas, in Londonderry, means the site of the lis or fort; Laraghshankill, in Armagh, the site of the old church. Caherlarhig, the stone fort of the site, near Clonakilty, in Cork, very probably derived its name from a cahir, built on the site of a more ancient dun.

Lathair [lauher], from which lathrach is derived, and which literally means "presence," is itself sometimes used in Cork and Kerry to signify a site, and is found also forming a part of names in these counties. Laheratanvally, near Skibbereen, in Cork, the site of the old town (Lathair-a'-tseanbhaile); Lahertidaly, in the same neighbourhood, the site of Daly's house. We find the diminutive Lareen, in Leitrim, and Lerhin, in Galway; Lislarheen (-more and -beg), in Clare, signifies the fort of the little site.

Laragh, in the parish of Kilcumreragh, Westmeath, takes its name from a castle of the Mageoghegans, whose ruins are yet there, and which the Four Masters call Leath-rath [Lara], i. e. half-rath; and some of the other Laraghs are probably derived from this Irish compound, and not from lathrach. Leath-rath is also the Irish name of Lara, or Abbeylara, in Longford, for so it is written in the annals.

Suidhe [see]. This word means a seat or sitting-place, cognate with Lat. sedes; it is found in our oldest authorities; and, among others, the MSS. of Zeuss (Gram. Celt. p. 60). It is frequently used in the formation of names usually under the forms see, sy, se, and sea; and these four syllables, in the sense of "seat," begin the names of over thirty townlands. It is very commonly followed by a personal name, which is generally understood to mean that the place so designated was frequented by the person, either as a residence, or as a favourite resort. The names of men, both pagan and Christian, are found combined with it.

See, which exactly represents suidhe in pronunciation, is the name of a townland in Cavan. On the south shore of Lough Derg, in Donegal, is the townland of Seadavog, the seat of St. Davog, the patron of Termondavog, or, as it is now called, Termonmagrath. In this name the word sea is understood in its literal sense, for the people still show the stone chair in which the saint was wont to sit.

The parish of Seagoe, in Armagh, is called in Irish Suidhe-Gobha, the seat of St. Gobha [Gow], or Gobanus; Colgan calls him "Gobanus of Teg-da-Goba, at the bank of the river Bann;" from which expression it appears that the place was anciently called Tech-Dagobha, the house of St. Dagobha, this last name being the same as Gobanus (p. 137 supra, note; see Reeves's Eccl. Ant., p. 107).

Shinrone, in the King's County, is mentioned by the Four Masters, who call it Suidhe-an-róin, the seat of the rón, i. e. literally a seal, but figuratively a hirsute or hairy man. In the same authority we find Seeoran, in Cavan, written Suidhe-Odhraín, Odhran's or Oran's seat. Seeconglas, in Limerick, Cuglas's seat; Syunchin, near Clogher, in Tyrone, the seat of the ash, i. e. abounding in ash trees.

Suidheachán [seehaun] is a kind of diminutive formation on suidhe, which we also find occasionally in names. For instance, there is a hill called Seeghane, near Tallaght, in Dublin; Seehanes (seats) is the name of a place near Dromdaleague, in Cork; and Seaghandoo and Seaghanbane (black and white), are two townlands in Mayo.

CHAPTER II.

ECCLESIASTICAL EDIFICES.

IT is well known that most of the terms employed in Irish to designate Christian structures, ceremonies, and offices, are derived directly from Latin. The early missionaries, finding no suitable words in the native language, introduced the necessary Latin terms, which, in course of time, were more or less considerably modified according to the laws of Irish pronunciation. Those applied to buildings are noticed in this Chapter; but we have besides, such words as easpog, old Irish, epscop, a bishop, from episcopus; sagart or sacart, a priest, from sacerdos; beannacht, old Irish ben-dacht, a blessing, from benedictio; Aiffrionn or Aiffrend, the Mass, from offerenda; and many others.

We know from many ancient authorities that the early Irish churches were usually built of timber planks, or of wattles or hurdles, plastered over with clay; and that this custom was so general as to be considered a national characteristic. Bede, for instance, mentions that when Finan, an Irish monk, became bishop of Lindisfarne, "he built a church fit for his episcopal see; he made it not, however, of stone, but altogether of sawn oak, and covered it with reeds, after the manner of the Scots" (Hist. Eccl., III. 25): and may other authorities to the same effect might be cited. In some of the lives of the early saints, we have interesting accounts of the erection of structures of this kind, very often by the hands of the ecclesiastics themselves—accounts that present beautiful pictures of religious devotion and humility; for the heads of the communities often worked with their own hands, in building up their simple churches—men who were, for long ages afterwards, and are still, venerated for their learning and holiness.

These structures, often put up hastily to meet the wants of a newly formed religious community, or the recently converted natives of a district, we know were generally very small and simple; and in some cases the names preserve the memory of the primitive materials. Kilclief, in the county of Down, took its name from one of those rude edifices; for its Irish name, as used by several authorities, is Cill-cleithe [clĕha], the hurdle church, from which the present form has been derived by the change of th to f (p. 49). The same name is found as Kilclay, near Clogher, in Tyrone; and a parish in Westmeath, called Kilcleagh, exhibits another, and still more correct form.

But timber was not the only material employed; for stone churches began to be erected from the earliest Christian period. It was believed indeed, until very recently, that buildings of stone and mortar were unknown in Ireland previous to the Anglo-Norman invasion; but Petrie has shown that churches of stone were erected in the fifth, sixth, and succeeding centuries; and the ruins of many of these venerable structures are still to be seen, and have been identified as the very buildings erected by the early saints.

Cill. The Irish words, cill, eaglais, teampull, domhnach, &c.—all originally Latin—signify a church. Cill [kill], also written cell and ceall, is the Latin cella, and, next to baile, it is the most prolific root in Irish names. Its most usual anglicised form is kill or kil, but it is also made kyle, keel, and cal; there are about 3400 names beginning with these syllables, and if we estimate that a fifth of them represent coill, a wood, there remain about 2700 whose first syllable is derived from cill. Of these, the greater number are formed by placing the name of the founder or patron after this word, of which I give a few illustrative examples here, but many more will be found scattered through the book.

Colman was a favourite name among the Irish saints; O'Clery's Calendar alone commemorates about sixty of the name. It is radically the same as Colum or Columba, and its frequency is probably to be attributed to veneration for the great St. Columba. There are in Ireland seven parishes, and more than twenty townlands (including Spenser's residence in Cork) called Kilcolman (Colman's church); but in many of these it is now difficult or impossible to determine the individual saints after whom they were called. St. Cainnech or Canice, who gave name to Kilkenny, and also to Kilkenny West, in Westmeath, was abbot of Aghabo, in Queen's county, where he had his principal church; he is mentioned by Adamnan in his Life of St. Columba, and he died in the year 598. There are thirty-five townlands and parishes scattered through the four provinces, called Kilbride, in Irish Cill-Bhrighde, Brigid's or Bride's church, most of which were dedicated to St. Brigid of Kildare. Kil-murry is the name of nearly fifty townlands, in which there must have been churches dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, for the Irish name is Cill-Mhuire, Mary's church.

Besides the names of saints, this term is combined with various other words, to form local names. Shan-kill, in Irish Seincheall, old church, is the name of seventeen townlands and four parishes, among others the parish which includes Belfast. There is a village in Kildare, called Kilcullen, which was much celebrated for its monastery; it is called by Irish writers Cill-cuillinn, the church of the holly, and there are several townlands in other counties of the same name. At Killeigh, near Tullamore, there was once a great ecclesiastical establishment, under the patronage of St. Sincheall. Its original name, as used in Irish authorities, is Cill-achaidh, the church of the field, which has been softened down to the present form. There was, according to Colgan, another place of the same name in East Breifny; and to distinguish them, Killeigh in King's County is usually called by the annalists Cill-achaidh-droma-fada, i. e. Killeigh of Drumfada, from a long ridge or hill which rises immediately over the village.

Kyle, a form much used in the south, is itself the name of more than twenty townlands, and constitutes the first syllable of about eighty others; a large proportion of these, however, probably half, are not churches, but woods (coill). In some parts of the south, Kyle is used to denote a burial place for children, and sometimes for unbaptized infants, but this is a modern application.

The diminutive, Killeen, is the name of more than seventy townlands, and its combinations are very numerous—all derived from a “little church,” except about a fifth from “woods.” Killeentierna, in Kerry, must have been founded by, or dedicated to, some saint named Tierna, or Tighernach. Killeens, and Killeeny, little churches, are also often met with. Monagilleeny, near Ardmore, in Waterford, is in Irish Moin-na-gcillínidhe, the bog of the little churches.

Calluragh, or, as it is written in Irish, Ceallurach, which is a derivative from cill, is applied in the southern counties, and especially in Clare, to an old burying ground; sometimes it means a burial place disused except only for the interment of children; and occasionally it denotes a burial place for unbaptized infants, even where there never was a church; as, for example, in the parish of Kilcrohane, in Kerry, where the old forts or lisses are sometimes set apart for this purpose, and called Callooraghs. In the anglicised form, Calluragh, this word has given name to several townlands.

Cealtrach [caltragh], which is also a derivative from cill, is used—chiefly in the western half of Ireland—to denote an old burying ground. It is commonly anglicised Caltragh, which is the name of a great many places; and there is a village in Galway called Caltra, another modification of the same word. We find Cloonacaltry in Sligo and Roscommon, the cloon or meadow of the burying ground. Cealdrach, another Irish form, gives name to eight townlands, now called Caldragh, which are confined to six counties, with Leitrim as centre; in one case it is made Keeldra, in this last county.

Eaglais. Another term for a church is eaglais [aglish], derived, in common with the Welsh eccluis, the Cornish eglos, and the Armoric ylis, from the Latin ecclesia. This term was applied to a great many churches in Ireland; for we have a considerable number of parishes and townlands called Aglish and Eglish, the former being more common in the south, and the latter in the north. There is a parish in Tipperary called Aglishcloghane, the church of the cloghaun, or row of stepping-stones; another in Limerick, called Aglishcormick, St. Cormac's church; and a third in Cork, called Aglishdrinagh, the church of the sloe bushes. Ballynahaglish, the town of the church, is the name of a parish in Mayo, and of another in Kerry; and near Ballylanders, in Limerick, is a place called Glennahaglish, the glen of the church. In the corrupt form Heagles, it is the name of two townlands near Ballymoney, in Antrim; and in the same neighbourhood we find Drumaheglis, the ridge or long hill of the church.

Teampull. From the Latin templum is derived the Irish teampull. Like cill, eaglais, and domhnach, it was adopted at a very early date, being found in the oldest Irish MSS., among others those cited by Zeuss. In anglicised names it is usually changed to temple, which forms the beginning of about ninety townland names; and it is to be borne in mind that these, though to all appearance at least partly English, are in reality wholly Irish. A remarkably large proportion of parishes have taken their names from these teampulls, there being no less than fifty parish names beginning with the word temple.

There are four parishes in Cork, Longford, Tipperary, and Waterford, where the original churches must have been dedicated to the Archangel Michael, as they still bear the name of Templemichael; Templebredon, in Tipperary, is called in Irish *Teampull-*ui-Bhrideáin, O'Bredon's church; and Temple-etney, in the same county, was so called from St. Eithne, whose memory is fast dying out there. The original church of Templecarn, not very far from the town of Donegal, must have been built near a pagan sepulchre, for the name signifies the church of the carn or monument. Templetuohy, in Tipperary, signifies the church of the tuath or territory, and it received this name as having been the principal church of the tuath or district in which it was situated. A cathedral, or any large or important church, was sometimes called, by way of distinction, Templemore, great church; and this is the name of three parishes in Londonderry, Mayo, and Tipperary, the first including the city of Derry, and the last, the town of Templemore.

Domhnach. The Irish word domhnach [downagh], which signifies a church, and also Sunday, is from the Latin Dominica, the Lord's day. According to the Tripartite Life, Jocelin, Ussher, &c., all the churches that bear the name of Domhnach, or, in the anglicised form, Donagh, were originally founded by St. Patrick; and they were so called because he marked out their foundations on Sunday. For example, in the Tripartite Life we are told that the saint "having remained for seven Sundays in Cianachta, laid the foundations of seven sacred houses to the Lord; [each of] which he therefore called Dominica," i. e. in Irish Domhnach.

There are nearly forty townlands whose names are formed by, or begin with, Donagh, of which more than twenty are also parish names. In all those places, there must have been one of the primitive Dominicas, and most of them have burial places and ruins to this day; fourteen of the parishes are called Donaghmore, great church. Donaghanie, near Clogher, in Tyrone, is called by the Four Masters, Domhnach-an-eich, the church of the steed; according to the same authority, the proper name of Donaghmoyne, in Monaghan, is Domhnach-maighin, the church of the little plain; and there is a place of the same name near Clogher, in Tyrone. The genitive form of the word (see p. 31) gives name to Donnycarney, Cearnach's or Carney's church, a village near Dublin, and another near Drogheda.

Aireagal. This word (pronounced arrigle), means primarily a habitation, but, in a secondary sense, it was often applied to an oratory, hermitage, or small church. The word is obviously derived from the Latin oraculum; for besides the similarity of form, we know that in the Latin Lives of the Irish saints who flourished on the continent, the oratories they founded are often designated by the term oraculum (Petrie, R. Towers, p. 349). It has been used in Irish from the earliest times, for it occurs in our oldest MSS., as for instance in the Leabhar na hUidhre, where we find it in the form airicul.

Errigal, the usual English form, is the name of a parish in Londonderry, and of a townland in Cavan. The well-known mountain called Errigal, in Donegal, in all probability took its name from an oratory, somewhere near it. The church of Errigal Keerogue, which gives name to a parish in Tyrone, was once a very important establishment; it is often mentioned by the annalists, and called by them Aireagal-Dachiarog, the church of St. Dachiarog. Errigal Trough in Monaghan, is called in Irish Aireagal-Trincha, the church of (the barony of) Trough. Duarrigle is the name of a place on the Blackwater, near Millstreet, in Cork, containing the ruins of a castle built by the O'Keeffes; its Irish name is Dubh-aireagal, black habitation or oratory; and there is another place of the same name near Kanturk.

Urnaidhe. This word, which is variously written urnaidhe, ornaidhe, or ernaidhe [urny, erny] signifies primarily a prayer, but in a secondary sense, it is applied to a prayer-house: Latin oratorium. It takes most commonly the form Urney, which is the name of some parishes and townlands in Cavan, Tyrone, and King's County; Urney, in Tyrone, is often mentioned by the Four Masters, and called Ernaidhe or Urnaidhe. The word often incorporates the article in English (see p. 22), and becomes Nurney (an Urnaidhe, the oratory), which is the name of several parishes, villages, and townlands, in Carlow and Kildare. It occurs in combination in Templenahurney, in Tipperary the church of the oratory.

Scrín. Scrín [skreen], which comes directly from the Latin scrinium, signifies a shrine, i. e. an ornamented casket or box, containing the relics of a saint. These shrines were very usual in Ireland; they were held in extraordinary veneration, and kept with the greatest care; and several churches where they were preserved were known on this account by the Irish name Scrín, or in English, Skreen, or Skrine. The most remarkable of these was Skreen, in Meath, which is called in the annals, Scrin-Choluimcille, St. Columkille's shrine, and it was so called because a shrine, containing some of that saint's relics, was preserved there.

Lann. Lann, in old Irish, land, means a house or church. The word is Irish, but in its ecclesiastical application, it was borrowed from the Welsh, and was introduced into Ireland at a very early age. It is found in our earliest MSS., among others in those of Zeuss; it occurs also in an ancient charter in the Book of Kells in the sense of house, and it is so translated by O'Donovan. It is a word common to several languages, and its primary signification seems to be an enclosed piece of ground; "Old Arm. lann; Ital., Fr., Provençal, landa, lande, Gothic (and English) land" (Ebel.).

It is not found extensively in local nomenclature, and I cannot find it at all in the south; but it has given origin to the names of a few remarkable places, one of which is Lynally, near Tullamore. The celebrated

St. Colman-Elo, its patron, was, according to O'Clery's Calendar, the son of St. Columba's sister. At an assembly of saints held in this neighbourhood about the year 590, Columba, who had come from the convention at Druim-ceat, to visit his monastery at Durrow, proposed that a spot of ground should be given to Colman, where he might establish a monastery; and Aedh Slaine, prince of Meath, afterwards king of Ireland, answered, that there was a large forest in his principality, called Fidh-Elo [Fee-Elo] i. e. the wood of Elo, where he might settle if he wished. Colman accepted it, and said:—"My resurrection shall be there, and henceforth I shall be named [Colman-Elo] from that place." He soon after erected a monastery there, which became very famous, and which was called Lann-Elo or Land-Ealla (O'Clery's Cal.), i. e. the church of Elo, now anglicised Lynally (see Lanigan, Eccl. Hist. II., 304).

Another place equally celebrated, was Lann-léire or Land-léri (Book of Leinster), i. e. the church of austerity, which until recently was supposed to be the old church of Lynn, on the east side of Lough Ennel, in Westmeath. But Dr. Reeves has clearly identified it with Dunleer, in Louth, the word dun being substituted for lann, while the latter part of the name has been preserved with little change. (See Dr. Todd in "Wars of GG.," Introd., p. xl.) The old church of Lynn, which gives name to a parish in Westmeath, though it is not the Lann-leire of history, derives its name from this word lann.

The word appears in other, and more correct forms, in Landmore, i. e. great church, in Londonderry; Landahussy or Lannyhussy, O'Hussy's house or church, in Tyrone; Lanaglug in the same county, Lann-na- gclog, the church of the bells. In Landbrock, in Fermanagh, Land appears to mean simply habitation, the name being applied to a badger warren—Lann-broc, house of badgers. Belan, in Kildare, is called by the annalists Biothlann, which name it may have derived from a house of hospitality; bioth, life or existence; Biothlann, refectory-house.

Glenavy, in Antrim, is another example of the use of this word. The g is a modern addition; and Dr. Reeves has remarked, that the earliest authority he finds for its insertion is a Visitation Book of 1661. In the Taxation of 1306, it is called Lennewy, and in other early English documents, Lenavy, Lynavy, &c., (Reeves, Eccl. Ant. p. 47), which very well represent the pronunciation of the original Irish name, Lann-abhaich, as given in the calendar, signifying the church of the dwarf. Colgan states that when St. Patrick had built the church there, he left it in charge of his disciple Daniel, who, from his low stature, was called abhac [avak or ouk], i. e. dwarf, and that from this circumstance the church got its name. It is worthy of remark here, that other places have got names from a like circumstance; for example, Cappanouk, in the parish of Abington, Limerick, represents the Irish Ceapach-an-abhaich, the garden plot of the dwarf.

Baisleac. This is a loan word, little changed, from the Latin basilica, and bears the same meaning, viz., a church; it is of long standing in Irish, being found in very ancient MSS., and was, no doubt, brought in, like the preceding terms, by the first Christian teachers. I am aware of only two places in Ireland deriving their names from this word. One is Baslick, an old church, giving name to a parish in Roscommon, which is often mentioned by the Four Masters, and which, in the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick, is called Baisleac-mór, great church. The other place has for its name the diminutive Baslickane, and is a townland in the parish of Kilcrohane, Kerry.

Disert. The word disert is from the Latin desertum, and retains its original meaning in Irish, viz, a desert, wilderness, or sequestered place. It is used very often in Irish writings; as for example, in the Battle of Moyrath, p. 10:—“Ocus disert mbec aigi ann sin,” and he (the saint) had a little disert (hermitage) there.” It is generally used in an ecclesiastical sense, to denote a hermitage, such secluded spots as the early Irish saints loved to select for their little dwellings; and it was afterwards applied to churches erected in those places.

Its most usual modern forms are Desert, Disert, Dysart, and Dysert, which are the names of a considerable number of parishes and townlands throughout Ireland, except only in the Connaught counties (where, however, the word is found in other forms). Desertmartin is the name of a village in Londonderry, and Desertserges that of a parish in Cork, the former signifying Martin's, and the latter, Saerghus's hermitage.

The word disert takes various corrupt forms in the mouths of the peasantry, both in Irish and English; such as ister, ester, tirs, tristle, &c. A good example of one of these corruptions is found in Estersnow, the name of a townland and parish in Roscommon. The Four Masters called it Disert-Nuadhan [Nooan], St. Nuadha's hermitage; but the people now call it in Irish, Tirs-Nuadhan; while in an Inquisition of Elizabeth, it is called in one place, Issetnowne, and in another place, Issertnowne, which stand as intermediate forms between the ancient and present names. Though written Estersnow in the Ordnance maps, it is really called by the people, when speaking English, Eastersnow, which form was evidently evolved under the corrupting influence noticed at page 36 supra (ix). The patron saint is probably the Nuadha commemorated in O'Clery's Calendar, at the 3rd of October; but he is now forgotten there, though his holy well, Tobernooan, is still to be seen, and retains his name (see O'Donovan's Four Masters, Vol. III., p. 546, note p.)

This root word assumes another form in Isertkelly, an ancient church giving name to a parish in Galway, mentioned by the Four Masters, who call it Disert-Cheallaigh, Ceallach's or Kelly's hermitage; and in Isertkieran, a parish in Tipperary, which, no doubt, received its name from St. Ciaran of Ossory (see p. 139 supra.) It is still further altered in Ishartmon, a parish in Wexford, St. Munna's desert, i. e. St. Munna of Taghmon (p. 279.)

In some of the Leinster counties, there are several places where names have been changed by the substitution of the modern word castle for the ancient disert; this may be accounted for naturally enough in individual cases, by the fact that a castle was erected on or near the site of the older hermitage. Castledermot, in Kildare, whose ancient importance is still attested by its round tower and crosses, is well known by the name of Disert-Diarmada; where Diarmad, son of Aedh Roin, king of Ulidia, founded a monastery about A. D. 800. The present form of the name was, no doubt, derived from the castle built there by Walter de Riddlesford in the time of Strongbow.

The Irish name of Castledillon, in Kildare, is Disert-Iolladhan [Disertillan], i. e. Iolladhan's hermitage. Castlekieran, near Oldcastle, in Meath, is another example. The ancient name of this place, as appears by the Four Masters, A. D. 868, was Bealachduin [Ballaghdoon], the road of the fort; but after the time of St. Ciaran the Pious, who founded a monastery there in the eighth century, and died in the year 770, it was generally called in the annals, Disert-Chiarain, St. Kieran's hermitage. The castle that originated the present form of the name belonged, as some think, to the Staffords, but, according to others, to the Plunkets.

Cros. Cros signifies a cross, and is borrowed from the Latin crux; it occurs in our earliest writings, and is found in some very old inscriptions on crosses. It is scarcely necessary to state that, from the time of the introduction of Christianity into this country, crosses were erected in connexion with churches and other religious foundations; they were at first simple and unadorned, but became gradually more elegant in design, and more elaborate in ornamentation; and we have yet remaining, in many parts of the country, crosses of the most beautiful workmanship, lasting memorials of the piety and artistic skill of our forefathers.

These monuments were not confined to religious buildings. In Adamnan's Life of St. Columba, it is related that on a certain occasion, a man whom the saint was coming to meet, suddenly fell down and expired. "Hence, on that spot, before the entrance to the kiln, a cross was erected, and another where the saint stopped, which is seen to this day." (Lib. I., Cap. 45); on which Dr. Reeves remarks: — "It was usual among the Irish to mark with a cross the spot where any providential visitation took place." This very general custom is attested not only by history, but also by the great number of places that have taken their names from crosses.

The word Cross itself is the name of about thirty townlands, and it forms the first syllable of about 150 others; there are, besides, numerous names in which it assumes other forms, or in which it occurs in the termination. Some of these places probably took their names from cross roads, and in others the word is used adjectively, to signify a transverse position; but these are exceptions, and the greater number commemorate the erection of crosses.

A cross must have formerly stood near the old parish church of Crosserlough, in Cavan, the Irish name being Cros-air-loch, the cross on or by the lake. Crossmolina, in Mayo, is called by the Four Masters, Cros-uis-Mhaeilfhína, O'Mulleeny's cross; the family of O'Maelfhina, whose descendants of the present day generally call themselves Mullany, had their seat here, and were chiefs of the surrounding district. There are some townlands and a village, in Down, called Crossgar, short cross; and Crossfarnoge, the name of a prominent cape near Carnsore point, signifies the cross of the alder tree. The parish of Aghacross (the ford of the cross), near Kildorrery, in Cork, took its name, no doubt, from a cross in connexion with St. Molaga's establishment (see p. 142), erected to mark a ford on the Funcheon. There are several places called Crossan, Crossane, and Crossoge, all which signify little cross.

The attenuated form crois is pronounced crush, and has given the name Crosh to two townlands in Tyrone; to Crushybracken, in Antrim, O'Bracken's cross, and to several other places. The diminutive, Crusheen, little cross, is the name of a small town in Clare; and there are townlands in Galway called Crisheen and Crisheeny,—the last meaning little crosses. Crosaire [crussera], which is a derivative from cros, is applied in the south of Ireland to cross-roads, and hence we have Crossery and Crussera, two townlands in Waterford, the latter near Dungarvan. For the form croch, see page 204.

CHAPTER III.

MONUMENTS, GRAVES, AND CEMETERIES.

BEFORE the introduction of Christianity, different modes of sepulture were practised in Ireland. In very early ages it was usual to burn the body, and place the ashes in an urn, which was deposited in the grave. It seems very extraordinary that all memory of this custom should be lost to both history and tradition; for I am not aware that there is any mention of the burning of bodies in any—even the oldest—of our native writings. But that the custom was very general we have the best possible proof; for in every part of Ireland, cinerary urns, containing ashes and burned bones, have been found, in the various kinds of pagan sepulchres. “Cremation does not appear to have been the rule as to the mode of interment in ancient Erin, as many remains of skeletons have been found. . . . When the dead were interred without cremation, the body was placed either in a horizontal, sitting, or recumbent posture. When the remains were burned, a fictile vessel was used to contain the ashes. These urns are of various forms and sizes. The style of decoration also differs widely—some being but rudely ornamented, while others bear indications of artistic skill which could not have been exercised by a rude or uncultivated people.”*

Occasionally the bodies of kings and chieftains were buried in a standing posture, arrayed in full battle costume, with the face turned towards the territories of their enemies. Of this custom we have several very curious historical records. In the Leabhar na hUidhre it is related that king Laeghaire (see pp. 129, 130, supra) was killed “by the sun and wind” in a war against the Lagenians; “and his body was afterwards brought from the south, and interred with his arms of valour, in the south-east of the external rampart of the royal Rath Laeghaire at Temur (Tara), with the face turned southwards upon the Lagenians [as it were] fighting with them, for he was the enemy of the Lagenians in his lifetime” (Petrie’s “Antiquities of Tara Hill,” p. 145). The same circumstance is related in a still older authority, with some additional interesting details—the “Annotations of Tirechan,” in the Book of Armagh. King Laeghaire says:—“For Neel, my father (i. e. Niall of the Nine Hostages), did not permit me to believe [in the preaching of St. Patrick], but that I should be interred in the top of Temur, like men standing up in war. For the pagans are accustomed to be buried armed, with their weapons ready, face to face [in which manner they remain], to the day of Erdathe, among the Magi, i. e. the day of judgment of the Lord” (Ibid., p. 146).

The pagan Irish believed, that while the body of their king remained in this position, it exercised a

* From the “Illustrated History of Ireland,” by F. M. C. (p. 117), the most attractive and the most racy history of our country that has yet appeared.

malign influence on their enemies, who were thereby always defeated in battle. Thus, in the life of St. Ceallach, it is stated, that his father, Owen Bel, great grandson of Dathi, and king of Connaught (see pp. 96 and 129 supra), was killed in the battle of Sligo, fought against the Ulstermen. And before his death he told his people "to bury him with his red javelin in his hand in the grave. 'Place my face towards the north, on the side of the hill by which the northerns pass when flying before the army of Connaught; let my grave face them, and place myself in it after this manner.' And this order was strictly complied with; and in every place where the Clanna Neill and the Connacians met in conflict, the Clanna Neill and the northerns were routed, being panic-stricken by the countenances of their foes; so that the Clanna Neill and the people of the north of Ireland, therefore resolved to come with a numerous host to Rath-O'bhFiachrach and raise [the body of] Owen from the grave, and carry his remains northwards across to Sligo. This was done, and the body was buried at the other side [of the river], at Aenach Locha Gile, with the mouth down, that it might not be the means of causing them to fly before the Connacians." (Translated by O'Donovan in "Hy Fiachrach," p. 472.)

It is very curious that, in some parts of the country, the people still retain a dim traditional memory of this mode of sepulture, and of the superstition connected with it. I have stated (p. 59 supra) that Slaghtaverty, in Londonderry, is called in Irish Leacht-abhartagh, the monument of the dwarf. This dwarf was a magician, and a dreadful tyrant, and after having perpetrated great cruelties on the people, he was at last vanquished and slain by a neighbouring chieftain. He was buried in a standing posture, but the very next day he appeared in his old haunts, more cruel and vigorous than ever. And the chief slew him a second time, and buried him as before, but again he escaped from the grave, and spread terror through the whole country. The chief then consulted a druid, and according to his directions, he slew the dwarf a third time, and buried him in the same place, with his head downwards; which subdued his magical power, so that he never again appeared on the earth. The laght raised over the dwarf is still there, and you may hear the legend with much detail, from the natives of the place, one of whom told it to me.

The modes of forming receptacles for the remains, and the monuments erected over them, were exceedingly various. It was customary in this country, as in many others, to pile a great heap of stones, usually called a carn, over the grave of any person of note; and where stones were not abundant, clay was used for the same purpose. Our pagan ancestors had a particular fancy for elevated situations as their final resting place; and accordingly we find that great numbers of mountains through the country have one or more of these carns on their summit, under each of which sleeps some important personage. They are sometimes very large, and form conspicuous objects, when viewed from the neighbouring plains.

Many mountains through every part of the country, take their names from these carns, the name of the monument gradually extending to the hill. Carnlea, a high hill north of Cushendall, in Antrim, is an example, its Irish name being Carn-liath, grey carn; Carntogher, the name of a range of hills in Londonderry, signifies the carn of the Causeway; the great pile on the top of Carn Clanhugh, in Longford (the carn of Hugh's sons), is visible for many miles over the level country round the mountain ; and Carron hill, near Charleville, county Cork, takes its name from a vast carn of stones on its summit.

The word carn forms the whole or the beginning of the names of about 300 townlands, in every one of which a remarkable carn must have existed, besides many others of whose names it forms the middle or end ; and there are innumerable monuments of this kind all through the country, which have not given names to townlands. It is very probable that the persons who are commemorated in such names as the following, are those over whom the carns were originally erected.

Carnteel, now a village and parish in Tyrone, is called by the Four Masters Carn-tSiadhail, Siadhal's or Shiel's monument. There is a remarkable mountain, with a carn on its summit, called Carn Tierna, near Rathcormack, in the county Cork. According to O'Curry (Lectures, p. 267), Tighernach [Tierna] Tetbannach, king of Munster in the time of Conor mac Nessa, in the first century, was buried in this, whence it was called Carn Tighernaigh, Tighernach's carn ; and the sound of the old name is preserved in the modern Carn Tierna. Carmavy (Grange), in the parish of Killead, Antrim, Maev's carn ; Carnkenny, near Ardstraw, in Tyrone, the carn of Cainnech or Kenny : Carnew, in Wicklow, probably contains the same personal name as Rathnew—Carn-Naoi, Naoi's carn.

It is certain that the following places have lost their original names :—Carndonagh, in Innishowen, which got the latter part of its name merely because the old monument was situated in the parish of Donagh ; there are some places in Antrim and Tyrone called Carnagat, the carn of the cats, from having been resorts of wild cats; and a similar remark applies to Carnalughoge, near Louth, the carn of the mice: Carney, in Sligo, is not formed from carn; it is really a family name, the full designation being Farran-O'Carney, O'Carney's land.

Other modifications of this word are seen in Carron, the name of several townlands in Waterford, Tipperary, and Limerick; in Carronadavderg, near Ardmore, in Waterford, the monument of the red ox, a singular name, no doubt connected with some legend; Carnane and Carnaun, little carn, are very often met with; and the form, Kernan, is the name of a townland near Armagh, and of another in the county Down.

The mounds or tumuli of earth or stones, raised over a grave, were sometimes designated by the word tuaim [toom]. Like the cognate Latin word tumulus, it was primarily applied to a hillock or dyke, and in a secondary sense to a monumental mound or tomb. These mounds, which were either of earth or stones, are still found in all kinds of situations, and sometimes they are exceedingly large. It is often not easy to distinguish them from the duns or residences; but it is probable that those mounds that have no appearance of circumvallations are generally sepulchral. They have given names to a great many places in every part of Ireland, in numbers of which the old tumuli still remain. There are about a dozen places, chiefly in the north, called Toome, the most remarkable of which is that on the Bann, between Lough Neagh and Lough Beg, which gives name to the two adjacent baronies. There must have been formerly at this place both a sandbank ford across the river, and a sepulchral mound near it, for in the Tripartite Life it is called Fearsat Tuama, the ford of the tumulus; but in the annals it is generally called Tuaim.

Tomgraney, in Clare, is often mentioned by the annalists, who call it Tuaim-Greině, the tomb of Grian, a woman's name. The traditions of the place still preserve the memory of the lady Grian, but the people now call her Gillagraney—Gilě-gréine, the brightness of the sun. They say that she was drowned in Lough Graney; that her body was found in the river Graney, at a place called Derrygraney; and that she was buried at Tomgraney. All these places retain her name, and her monument is still in existence near the village. Grian, which is the Irish word for the sun, and is of the feminine gender, was formerly very usual in Ireland as a woman's name. There is a place called Carngranny, near the town of Antrim, where another lady named Grian must have been buried. Her monument also remains:—"it consists of ten large slabs raised on side supporters, like a series of cromlechs, forming steps commencing with the lowest at the north-east, and ascending gradually for the length of forty feet towards the south-west" (Reeves's Eccl. Ant., p. 66). The pile is called Granny's Grave, which is a translation of Carn-Gréinė.

The parish of Tomfinlough, in Clare, took its name from an old church by a lake near Sixmile-bridge, which is several times mentioned by the Four Masters under the name of Tuaim-Fionnlocha, the tumulus of the bright lake. Toomona, in the parish of Ogulla, same county, where are still to be seen the ruins of a remarkable old monastery, is called in the annals Tuaim-mona, the tomb of the bog. Toomyvara, in Tipperary, is in Irish Tuaim-ui-Mheadhra, O'Mara's tomb; and Tomdeely, a townland giving name to a parish in Limerick, is probably the tumulus of the (river) Deel.

On the summit of Tomies mountain, which rises over the lower lake of Killarney, there are two sepulchral heaps of stones, not far from one another; hence the Irish name Tumaidhe [Toomy], i. e. monumental mounds; and the present name, which has extended to three townlands, has been formed by the addition of the English after the Irish plural (see page 30). Tooman and Toomog, little tombs, are the names of several townlands, in different counties.

Dumha [dooa] is another word for a sepulchral mound or tumulus; it is very often used in Irish writings, and we frequently find it recorded, that the bodies of the slain were buried in a dumha. These mounds have given names to numerous places, but being commonly made of earth, they have themselves in many cases disappeared. Moy, in Tyrone, near Charlemont, has retained only a part of its ancient name, Magh-dumha, the plain of the sepulchral mound (O'D., Four Mast.); the same name is preserved in full in Moydow, a parish and barony in Longford, which the Four Masters also call Magh-dumha; and there is a townland called Moydow in Roscommon.

In modern names it is not easy to separate this word from dubh, black, and dumhach, a sand bank; but the following names may be referred to it. Dooley, which is the name of several townlands in Ulster, is no doubt generally one of its modern forms, though when that name occurs on the coast, it is more likely to be from dumhach. Knockadoo, the hill of the mound, is the name of some townlands in Roscommon, Sligo, and Londonderry; and there are several places called Corradoo, Corradooa, and Corradoey, the round hill of the tumulus.

A leacht [laght] is a sepulchre or monument, probably cognate with Lat. lectus; for in many languages, a grave is called a bed (see leaba, further on). It is often applied, like carn, to a monumental heap of stones; in Cormac's Glossary it is explained lighedh mairbh, the grave of a dead (person).

There are several places in different parts of the country, called Laght, which is its most correct anglicised form; Laghta, monuments, is the name of some townlands in Mayo and Leitrim, and we find Laghtagalla white sepulchres, near Thurles. Laghtane, little laght, is a place in the parish of Killeenagarriff, Limerick.

In the north of Ireland, the guttural is universally suppressed, and the word is pronounced lat or let; as we find in Latt, the name of a townland in Armagh, and of another in Cavan; Derlett, in Armagh, the oak wood of the grave (Doire-leachta); Letfern, in Tyrone, the laght of the alder trees; and Corlat, the name of several places in the Ulster counties, the round hill of the sepulchres.

The word uladh [ulla] originally meant a tomb or carn, as the following passages will show:—"oc denam uluidh cumdachta imat flaith," making a protecting tomb over thy chief (O'Donovan, App. to O'Reilly's Dict. voce uladh). In the Leabhar na hUidhre, it is related that Caeilte [Keeltha], Finn mac Cumhal's foster son, slew Fothadh Airgtheach, monarch of Ireland, in the battle of Ollarba (Larne Water), in A. D. 285. Caeilte speaks:—"The uluidh of Fothadh Airgtheach will be found a short distance to the east of it. There is a chest of stone about him in the earth; there are his two rings of silver, and his two bunne doat [bracelets?] and his torque of silver on his chest; and there is a pillar stone at his carn; and an ogum is [inscribed] on the end of the pillar stone which is in the earth; and what is on it is, 'Eochaidh Airgtheach here' " (Petrie, R. Towers, p. 108).

The word is now, however, and has been for a long time, used to denote a penitential station, or a stone altar erected as a place of devotion; a very natural extension of meaning, as the tombs of saints were so very generally used as places of devotion by the faithful. It was used in this sense at an early period, for in the "Battle of Moyrath," it is said that "Domhnall never went away from a cross without bowing, nor from an ulaidh, without turning round, nor from an altar without praying" (p. 298). On which O'Donovan remarks:—" Uluadh, a word which often occurs in ancient MSS., is still understood in the west of Ireland to denote a penitential station at which pilgrims pray, and perform rounds on their knees." These little altar tombs have given names to places all over Ireland, in many of which, especially in the west and south, they may still be seen.

Among several places in Cork, we have Glennahulla, near Kildorrery, and Kilnahulla, in the parish of Kilmeen, the glen and the church of the altar tomb; the latter name being the same as Kilulla, in Clare. In Ulusker, near Castletown Bearhaven, the word seems to be used in its primary sense, as the name is understood to mean Oscar's carn (Uladh-Oscuir); and in this sense we must, no doubt, understand it in Tullyullagh, near Enniskillen, the hill of the tombs. Knockanully, in Antrim, signifies the hill of the tomb; and Tomnahulla, in Galway, would be written in Irish, Tuaim-na-hulaidh, the mound of the altar-tomb. We have the diminutive Ullauns, near Killarney, and Ullanes, near Macroon, in Cork, both signifying little stone altars.

“A cromlech, when perfect, consists of three or more stones unhewn, and generally so placed as to form a small enclosure. Over these a large [flat] stone is laid, the whole forming a kind of rude chamber. The position of the table, or covering stone, is generally sloping; but its degree of inclination does not appear to have been regulated by any design” (Wakeman’s Handbook of Irish Antiquities, p. 7). They are very numerous in all parts of Ireland, and various theories have been advanced to account for their origin; of which the most common is that they were “Druids’ altars,” and used for offering sacrifices. It is now, however, well known that they are tombs, which is proved by the fact that under many of them have been found cinerary urns, calcined bones, and sometimes entire skeletons. The popular name of “Giants’ graves,” which is applied to them in many parts of the country, preserves, with sufficient correctness, the memory of their original purpose. They have other forms besides that described; sometimes they are very large, consisting of a chamber thirty or forty feet long, covered by a series of flags, laid horizontally, like Carngranny (p. 308); and not unfrequently the chamber is in the form of a cross.

The word cromlech—crom-leac, sloping stone—is believed not to be originally Irish; but to have been in late years introduced from Wales, where it is used merely as an antiquarian term. That it is not an old Irish word is proved by the fact, that it is not used in the formation of any of our local names. It has none of the marks of a native term, for it is not found in our old writings, and—like the expression “Druids’ altars"—it is quite unknown to the Irish-speaking peasantry.

These sepulchres are sometimes called leaba or leabaidh [labba, labby], which literally signifies a bed, but is applied in a secondary sense to a grave, both in the present spoken language, and in old writings. For example, in the ancient authority cited by Petrie (R. Towers, p. 350), it is stated that the great poet Rumann, who died in the year 747, at Rahan, in King's County, "was buried in the same leabaidh with Ua Suanaigh, for his great honor with God and man." There is a fine sepulchral monument of this kind, hitherto unnoticed, in a mountain glen over Mount Russell, near Charleville, on the borders of the counties of Limerick and Cork, which the peasantry call Labba-Iscur, Oscur's grave. O'Brien (Dict. voce Leaba) says, "Leaba is the name of several places in Ireland, which are by the common people called Leabthacha-na-bhféinne, the monuments of the Fenii or old Irish champions;" and it may be remarked that Oscur was one of the most renowned of these, being the son of Oisín, the son of Finn mac Cumhal (see p. 84 supra).

Labby, which is one of the modern forms of this term, is the name of a townland in Londonderry. Sometimes the word is followed by a personal name, which is probably that of the individual buried in the monument; as in Labbasheeda, in Clare, Sioda's or Sheedy's grave; and Labbyeslin, near Mohill, in Leitrim, the tomb of Eslin.

Cromlechs are called in many parts of the country Leaba-Dhiarmada-agus-Grainne, the bed of Diarmaid and Grainne; and this name is connected with the well-known legend, that Diarmad O'Duibhne eloped with Grainne, the daughter of king Cormac mac Art, and Finn mac Cumhal's betrothed spouse. The pair eluded Finn's pursuit for a year and a day, sleeping at a different place each night, under a leaba, erected by Diarmaid after his day's journey; and according to the legend there were just 366 of them in Ireland. But this legend is a late invention, and evidently took its rise from the word leabaidh, which was understood in its literal sense of a bed. The fable has, however, given origin to the name of Labbadermody, Diarmaid's bed, a townland in the parish of Clondrohid, in Cork; and to the term Labbacallee—Leaba-caillighe, hag's bed—sometimes applied to these monuments.

In some parts of Ulster a cromlech is called clochtogbhala [clogh-tōgvla], i. e. raised or lifted stone, in reference to the covering flag; from which Cloghtogle, near Enniskillen, and Cloghogle (t aspirated and omitted—p. 20), two townlands in Tyrone, have their name. There is a hill near Downpatrick called Slieve na griddle, the mountain of the griddle; the griddle is a cromlech on the top of the hill; but the name is half English, and very modern.

“In many parts of Ireland, and particularly in districts where the stone circles occur, may be seen huge blocks of stone, which evidently owe their upright position, not to accident, but to the design and labour of an ancient people. They are called by the native Irish gallauns or leaganns, and in character they are precisely similar to the hoar-stones of England, the hare-stane of Scotland, and the maen-gwyr of Wales. Many theories have been promulgated relative to their origin. They are supposed to have been idol-stones—to have been stones of memorial—to have been erected as landmarks, boundaries, &c.—and, lastly, to be monumental stones” (Wakeman's “Handbook of Irish Antiquities,” p. 17). We know that the erection of pillar stones as sepulchral monuments is often recorded in ancient Irish authorities, one example of which will be found in the passage quoted from Leabhar na hUidhre at page 310; but it is probable that some were erected for other purposes.

There are several words in Irish to signify a pillar stone; one of which is coirthe or cairthe [corha, carha]. It is used in every part of Ireland, and has given names, under various forms, to many different places, in several of which the old pillar stones are yet standing. The beautiful valley and lake of Glencar, on the borders of Leitrim and Sligo, is called in Irish Gleann-a'-chairthe, the glen of the pillar stone; but its ancient name, as used by the Four Masters, was Cairthe-Muilcheann. Carha and Carra, the names of several townlands in Ulster and Connaught, exhibit the word in its simple anglicised forms. There is a place in the parish of Clonfert, Cork, called Knockahorra, which represents the Irish Cnoc-a'-chairthe, the hill of the pillar stone; and in Louth we find Drumnacarra, which has nearly the same meaning.

These stones are also, as Mr. Wakeman remarks, called gallauns, and leaganns. The Irish form of the first is gallán, and it has given name to Gallan, near Ardstraw, in Tyrone; and to Gallane, and Gallanes, in Cork. There are several low hills in Ulster, which, from a pillar stone standing on the top, were called Drumgallan, and some of them have given names to townlands. Aughagallon, the field of the gallan, is the name of a townland in Tyrone, and of a parish in Antrim; Knockagallane (hill) is the name of two townlands in Cork, and there is a parish near Mitchelstown, in the same county, called Kilgullane, the church of the pillar stone.

The word gall, of which gallán is a diminutive, was applied to standing stones, according to Cormac mac Cullenan (see p. 87 supra), because they were first erected in Ireland by the Gauls. This word is also used in the formation of names; as in Cangullia, a place near Castleisland, in Kerry, the Irish name of which is Ceann-gaille, the head or hill of the standing stone. The adjective gallach, meaning a place abounding in standing stones, or large stones or rocks, has given name to several places now called Gallagher, scattered through all the provinces except Munster; and Gallow, the name of a parish in Meath, is another form of the same word.

The other term liagán [leegaun] is a diminutive of liag, which will be noticed farther on; and in its application to a standing stone, it is still more common than gallán. Legan, Legane, Legaun, and Leegane, all different anglicised forms, are the names of several places in different parts of the country; and the English plural Liggins (pillar stones) is found in Tyrone. Ballylegan, the town of the standing stone, is the name of a place near Caher, in Tipperary, and of another near Glanworth, in Cork; there is a place called Tooraleagan (Toor, a bleak green), near Ballylanders, in Limerick; and Knockalegan, the hill of the pillar stone, is the name of half a dozen townlands in Ulster and Munster.

Fert, plural ferta, signifies a grave or trench. The old name of Slane, on the Boyne, was Ferta-fer-feic, and the account given by Colgan (Trias Thaum., p. 20) of the origin of this name, brings out very clearly the meaning of ferta:—"There is a place on the north margin of the river Boyne, now called Slaine; [but anciently] it was called Ferta-fer-Feic, i. e. the trenches or sepulchres of the men of Fiac, because the servants of a certain chieftain named Fiac, dug deep trenches there, to inter the bodies of the slain."

In the Book of Armagh there is an interesting account by Tirechan, of the burial in the ferta, of Laeghaire's three daughters (see p. 168 supra), who had been converted by St. Patrick:—"And the days of mourning for the king's daughters were accomplished, and they buried them near the well Clebach; and they made a circular ditch like to a ferta; because so the Scotie people and gentiles were used to do, but with us it is called Reliquiæ, (Irish Releg), i. e. the remains of the virgins." (Todd's Life of St. Patrick, p. 455). Ferta was originally a pagan term, as the above passage very clearly shows, but like cluain and other words, it was often adopted by the early Irish saints (see Reeves's "Ancient Churches of Armagh," p. 47).

The names Farta, Ferta, and Fartha (i. e. graves), each of which is applied to a townland, exhibit the plural in its simple form; with the addition of ach, to the singular, we have Fertagh and Fartagh, i. e. a place of graves, which are names of frequent occurrence. Fertagh, near Johnstown, in Kilkenny, is called by the Four Masters Ferta-na-gcaerach, the graves of the sheep; and O'Donovan states that, according to tradition, it was so called because the carcasses of a great number of sheep which died of a distemper, were buried there. (Four Masters, Vol. I., p. 498.) In the parish of Magheross, Monaghan, there is a townland called Nafarty, i. e. the graves, the Irish article na, forming part of the name. The parish of Moyarta, in Clare, which gives name to a barony, is called in Irish Magh-fherta, the plain of the grave.

Reilig means a cemetery or grave yard; it is the Latin reliquiæ, and was borrowed very early, for it occurs in the Zeuss MSS. The most celebrated place in Ireland with this name, was Reilig-na-riogh, or "the burial place of the kings," at the royal palace of Cruachan, in Connaught, one of the ancient regal cemeteries. There are only a few places in Ireland taking their names from this term. Relick is the name of two townlands in Westmeath, and there is a graveyard in the parish of Carragh, near Naas, county Kildare, called The Relick, i. e. the cemetery. The parish of Relickmurry [and Athassel] in Tipperary, took its name from an old burial ground, whose church must have been dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, for the name signifies Mary's cemetery.

CHAPTER IV.

TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

"THE most interesting word connected with topical nomenclature is bally. As an existing element, it is the most prevalent of all local terms in Ireland, there being 6400 townlands, or above a tenth of the sum total, into [the beginning of] whose names this word enters as an element. And this is a much smaller proportion than existed at the beginning of the seventeenth century, when there was a tendency, at least in some of the northern counties, to prefix bally to almost every name whose meaning would admit of it." ("The Townland Distribution of Ireland," by the Rev. Wm. Reeves, D. D.: Proc. R. I. A., Vol. VII., p. 473, where this word bailē is fully discussed).

The Irish word bailē is now understood to mean a town or townland, but in its original acceptation it denoted simply locus—place or situation; it is so explained in various ancient glosses, such as those in the Book of Armagh, Cormac's Glossary, the Book of Lecan, &c.; and it is used in this sense in the Leabhar na hUidhre, and many other old authorities.

In writings of more modern date, it is often used to signify a residence or military station—a natural extension of meaning from the original. For instance, the Four Masters, at 1560, state that Owen O'Rourke, having been kept in prison by his brother, slew his keeper, "and, ascending to the top of the baile, cried out that the castle was in his power:" in which baile evidently means the fortress in which he was confined. And in the story of "The fate of the children of Lir" we read:—"She [Aeifē] went on to [the fairy residence called] Sidh Buidhbh Deirg; and the nobles of the baile bade her welcome." (Atlantis, VII., p. 124).

This application of the term is obviously preserved in the name of the tongue of land on which the Howth lighthouse is built, which is called the Green Bailey. Our annals relate that Criffan, monarch of Ireland in the first century, had his residence, Dun-Criffan, at Ben Edar or Howth, to which he brought the spoils of his famous warlike expedition to foreign lands, and where he died in A. D. 9. Petrie and O'Donovan both believe that the lighthouse occupies the site of this ancient fortress; and portions of the fosses by which it was defended are still clearly traceable across the neck of the little peninsula. And so the memory of Criffan's old bally, which has long been lost in popular tradition, still lives in the name of the Bailey lighthouse. In the colloquial language of the present day the word baile is used to signify home, which is obviously a relic of its more ancient application to a residence.

In modern times this word is usually translated "town;" but in this sense it is applied to the smallest village, even to a collection of only a couple of houses. It is also used to designate mere townlands, without any reference at all to habitations. This application is as old as the twelfth century; for we are informed by Dr. Reeves that the word was often so used in the charters of that period, such as those of Kells, Newry, Ferns, &c., in which numbers of denominations are mentioned, whose names contain it in the forms, bali, baley, balli, balē, &c. It is probable that in many old names which have descended to our own time the word bally is used in the sense of "residence," but it is difficult or impossible to distinguish them; and I have, for the sake of uniformity, throughout this book translated the word by "town" or "townland."

The most common anglicised form of baile is bally, which is found in a vast number of names; such as Ballyorgan, near Kilfinnane, in Limerick, which the people call in Irish Baile-Aragáin, the town of Aragan, an ancient Irish personal name, the same as the modern Horgan or Organ. In Ballybofey (Donegal), the bally is a modern addition; and the place, if it had retained an anglicised form of the old name, Srath-bo-Fiaich (Four Masters), should have been called Srathbofey. Some old chief or occupier named Fiach must have in past times kept his cows on the beautiful holm along the river Finn near the town; for the name signifies the srath or river holm of Fiach's cows. Ballyheige, in Kerry, has its name from the family of O'Teige, its full Irish name being Baile-ui-Thadg; and Ballylanders is in like manner called from the English family of Landers. Indeed, a considerable proportion of these Ballys take their names from families, of which many are so plain as to tell their own story.

When bally is joined to the article followed by a noun in the genitive singular, if the noun be masculine, the Irish Baile-an- is generally contracted to Ballin-; as we find in Ballinrobe, in Mayo, which the Four Masters write Baile-an-Rodhba [Rōba], the town of the (river) Robe; and in Ballincurry, Bal-lincurra, and Ballincurrig, all which are in Irish Baile-an-churraigh, the town of the moor or marsh. But it is occasionally made Ballyn-, as in Ballyneety, the name of a dozen places, chiefly in Waterford, Tipperary, and Limerick, which represents the sound of the Irish Baile-an-Fhaeite, the town of White, a family name of English origin. If the following noun be feminine, or in the genitive plural, the Irish Baile-na- is made either Ballina- or Ballyna-; as in the common townland names, Ballynahinch and Ballinahinch, the town of the island; Ballynaglogh, the town of the stones.

In the counties on the eastern coast, bally is very often shortened to bal, of which there are numerous examples, such as Baldoyle, near Dublin, which is called in Irish Baile-Dubhghoill, the town of the black gall or Dane; Balbriggan, the town of Breacan, a very usual personal name; Balrath, the town of the fort; Baltrasna, cross-town, i. e. placed in a transverse direction.

The plural of baile is bailte, which appears in names as it is pronounced, balty. There is a townland in Wicklow, near Hollywood, called Baltyboys, i. e. Boice's townlands; and a further step in the process of anglicisation appears in its alias name of Boystown, which form has given name to the parish. Baltylum, in Armagh, bare townlands, i. e. bare of trees; Baltydaniel, in Cork, Donall's or Domhnall's townlands. The diminutives Balleen and Balteen (little town), are the names of several places in Kilkenny and the Munster counties; Balteenbrack, in Cork, speckled little town.

Baile is not much liable to changes of form, further than I have noticed; yet in a few names we find it much disguised. For instance, Coolballow in the parish of Kerloge, Wexford, represents Cul-bhaile, back town, the same as we find in Coolbally and Coolballyogan (Hogan's), in Queen's county, and Coolballyshane (John's), in Limerick. The proper original of Bauville in Innishowen, Donegal, is Bo-bhaile, cowtown; Loughbollard near Clane, Kildare, the lake of the high-town; Derrywillow, in Leitrim, represents Doire-bhaile, which, with the root words reversed, is the same name as Ballinderry, the town of the oak wood.

Sráid [sraud] signifies a street, and appears to be borrowed from the Latin strata. The Four Masters use it once when they mention Sraid-an-fhiona, the street of the wine, now Winetavern-street, in Dublin. There are several townlands in Antrim, Donegal, and Londonderry, called Straid, which is one of its English forms, and which enters into several other names in the same counties; we find Strade, in Mayo, and Stradeen, little street, in Monaghan. It is also sometimes made strad, as in Stradreagh, in Londonderry, grey-street; Stradavoher, near Thurles, the street of the road: Stradbrook, near Monkstown, Dublin, is very probably a translation of Sruthan-na-sraidē, the brook of the street.

A village consisting of one street, undefended by either walls or castle—a small unfortified hamlet—was often called Sradbhaile, i. e. street-town; which, in its English form, Stradbally, is the name of several villages, parishes, and townlands, in the southern half of Ireland. Stradbally, in Queen's county, is mentioned by the Four Masters, who calls it "Sradbhaile of Leix."

Buirghes [burris], signifies a burgage or borough. This word was introduced by the Anglo-Normans, who applied it to the small borough towns which they established, several of which have retained the original designations. After the twelfth century, it is often found in Irish writings, but always as a part of local names.

It is usually spelled in the present anglicised names, Borris, Burris, and Burges, which are met with, forming the whole or part of names in several of the Munster, Connaught, and Leinster counties: it does not occur in Ulster. Burriscarra, Borris-in-Ossory, Borrisoleagh, and Burrishoole, were so called to distinguish them from each other, and from other Borrises; being situated in the ancient territories of Carra, Ossory, Ileagh or Ui-Luighdheach, and Umhall, or "The Owles." Burrisnafarney, the name of a parish in Tipperary, signifies, the borough of the alder-plain; Borrisokane, O'Keane's borough town.

Graig, a village. It is supposed by many to have been introduced by the Anglo-Normans, but its origin is very doubtful. It is used extensively in the formation of names, there being upwards of sixty places called Graigue, and a great many others of whose names it forms a part. It does not occur at all in Ulster.

The name of Graignenamanagh, in Kilkenny, bears testimony to its former ecclesiastical eminence, for it signifies the village of the monks; Graiguealug and Graiguenaspiddogue, both in Carlow, the village of the hollow, and of the robin-redbreasts; Graiguefrahane, in Tipperary, the graig of the freaghans or whortleberries. Gragane and Graigeen, in Limerick, Gragan, in Clare, and Grageen, in Wexford, all signify little village, being different forms of the diminutive; Ardgraigne, in Galway, and Ardgregane, in Tipperary, the height of the village.

CHAPTER V.

FORDS, WEIRS, AND BRIDGES.

THE early inhabitants of a country, often, for obvious reasons, selected the banks of rivers for their settlements; and the position most generally chosen was opposite a part of the stream sufficiently shallow to be fordable by foot passengers. Many of our important towns, as their names clearly indicate, derive their origin from these primitive and solitary settlements; but most of the original fords have been long since spanned by bridges.

But whether there was question of settlements or not, the fordable points of rivers must have been known to the very earliest colonists, and distinguished by names; for upon this knowledge depended, in a great measure, the facility and safety of intercommunication, before the erection of bridges. Fords were, generally speaking, natural features, but in almost all cases they were improved by artificial means, as we find mentioned by Boate:—"Concerning the fords: it is to be observed that not every where, where the high-ways meet with great brooks or small rivers, bridges are found for to pass them, but in very many places one is constrained to ride through the water itself, the which could not be done if the rivers kept themselves everywhere inclosed between their banks; wherefore they are not only suffered in such places to spread themselves abroad, but men help thereto as much as they can, to make the water so much the shallower, and consequently the easier to be passed" (Nat. Hist., c. VII., sect. vii.). Very often also, when circumstances made it necessary, a river was rendered passable at some particular point, even where there was no good natural ford, by laying down stones, trees, or wicker work. For these reasons I have included "Fords" in this third Part among artificial structures.

There are several Irish words for the different kinds of fords, of which the most common is ath, cognate with Latin vadum. In the various forms, ath, ah, augh, agh, a, &c., it forms a part of hundreds of names all over Ireland (see p. 41, supra). The Shannon must have been anciently fordable at Athlone; and there was a time when the site of the present busy town was a wild waste, relieved by a few solitary huts, and when the traveller—directed perhaps by a professional guide—struggled across the dangerous passage where the bridge now spans the stream. It appears from the "Battle of Moylena" (p. 60), that this place was first called Athmore, great ford, which was afterwards changed to Ath-Luain, the ford of Luan, a man's name, formerly very common. I know nothing further of this Luan, except that we learn his father's name from a passage in the tale called "The fate of the children of Tuireann," in which the place is called Ath-Luain-mic-Luighdheach, of Luan the son of Lewy.

Athleague, on the Suck, in the county Rosecommon, is called by the Four Masters Ath-liag, the ford of the stones, or, more fully, Ath-liag-Maenagain, from St. Maenagan, who was formerly venerated there, though no longer remembered. The people say that there is one particular stone which the river never covers in its frequent inundations, and that if it were covered, the town would be drowned. There was another Ath-liag on the Shannon, which is also very often mentioned in the annals; it crossed the river at the present village of Lanesborough, and it is now called in Irish Baile-atha-liag, or in English Ballyleague (the town of the ford of the stones), which is the name of that part of Lanesborough lying on the west bank of the Shannon. It is often called in the annals Ath-liag-finn, the ford of the white stones. Another name nearly the same as this, is that of Athlacea, in Limerick, which was so called from a ford on the Morning Star river, called in Irish Ath-leacach, stony or flaggy ford. And it will appear as I go on, that a great many other places derive their names from these stony fords.

Ath is represented by aa in Drumaa, the name of two townlands in Fermanagh, in Irish Druim-atha, the ridge of the ford. A ford on the river Inny, formerly surrounded with trees, gave name to the little village of Finnea, in Westmeath, which the Four Masters call Fidh-an-atha, the wood of the ford. Af-fane, a well-known place on the Blackwater, took its name from a ford across the river about two miles below Cappoquin; it is mentioned by the Four Masters, when recording the battle fought there in the year 1565, between the rival houses of Desmond and Ormond, and they call it Ath-mheadhon, middle ford. At the year 524, we read in the Four Masters, "the battle of Ath-sighe [Ah-shee] (was gained) by Muircheartach (king of Ireland) against the Leinstermen, where Sidhe, the son of Dian, was slain, from whom Ath-Sidhe [on the Boyne] is called;" and the place has preserved this name, now changed to Assey, which, from the original ford, has been extended to a parish. The same authority states (A. D. 526), that Sin [sheen], the daughter of Sidhe, afterwards killed Muircheartach, by burning the house of Cletty over his head, in revenge of her father's death.

Ath is very often combined with baile, forming the compound Baile-atha, the town of the ford; of which Ballyboy in the King's county, a village giving name to a parish and barony, is an example, being called in various authorities, Baile-atha-buidhe, the town of the yellow ford. There are many townlands in different counties, of the same name, but it probably means yellow town in some of these cases. Ballylahan, in the parish of Templemore, Mayo, is called in the annals Baile-atha-leathain, the town of the broad ford. The parish of Ballee, in Down, is written in the Taxation of 1306, Baliath, which shows clearly, that the original name is Baile-atha (Reeves, Eccl. Ant., p. 41).

The diminutive athán is of frequent occurrence; in the form of Ahane (little ford), it gives name to several townlands in the southern counties; and there is a parish in Derry called Aghanloo, or in Irish Athan-Lugha, Lewy's little ford.

The word bél or béal [bale] primarily signifies a mouth, but in a secondary sense it was used, like the Latin os, to signify an entrance to any place. In this sense it appears in Bellaugh, the name of a village lying west of Athlone. Between this village and the town there was formerly a slough or miry place, called in Irish a lathach [lahagh], which the Four Masters mention by the name of Lathach-Caichtuth-bil, Catubel's miry place; and the spot where the village stands, was called Bel-lathaigh, the entrance to the lathach, which is now correctly enough anglicised Bellaugh. Bellaghy, another, and more correct form, is the name of a village in Londonderry, of another in Sligo, and of a townland in Antrim.

This word bél is very often united with ath, forming the compound bél-atha, which signifies ford-entrance, or literally mouth of a ford; it is applied to a ford, and has in fact much the same signification as ath itself. It is so often used in this manner that the word bél alone sometimes denotes a ford. Belclare, now the name of a parish in Galway, was more anciently applied to a castle erected to defend a ford on the road leading to Tuam, which was called Bel-an-chlair, the ford or entrance to the plain. There is also a townland in Mayo, called Belclare, and another in Sligo, which the Four Masters call Bel-an-chlair. Phale, near Enniskeen, in Cork, is called in the Annals of Innisfallen, Inis-an-bheil [Innishanvale], the last syllable of which is preserved in the present name.

The proper anglicised form of bel-atha, is bella, which is the beginning of a great many names. Bellanagare, in Roscommon, formerly the residence of Charles O'Connor the historian, is called in Irish Bel-atha-na-gcarr, the ford-mouth of the cars; Lisbellaw, in Fermanagh, Lios-bél-atha, the lis of the ford-mouth. Sometimes the article intervenes, making bel-an-atha in the original, the correct modern representative of which is bellanā, as we find in Bel-lanacargy, in Cavan, the ford-mouth of the rock.

Bél-atha is often changed in modern names to balli or bally, as if the original root were baile, a town; and bel-an-atha is made ballina. Both of these modern forms are very general, but they are so incorrect as to deserve the name of corruptions. Ballina is the name of about twenty-five townlands and villages in different parts of Ireland, several of which are written Bel-an-atha in the annals. Ballina in Tipperary, opposite Killaloe, was so called from the ford—now spanned by a bridge—called Ath-naborumha, the ford of the cow tribute; and here no doubt the great monarch Brian was accustomed to cross the Shannon when returning to his palace of Kincora, with the herds of cattle exacted from the Leinstermen. Ballina in Mayo, on the Moy, is somewhat different, and represents a longer name, for it is called in an ancient poem in the Book of Lecan, Bel-ath-an-fheadha [Bellahanā], the ford-mouth of the wood. We find this compound also in Ballinafad, in Sligo, which the Four Masters call Bel-an-atha-fada, the mouth of the long ford; and there is a village in Leitrim and several townlands in other counties, called Ballinamore, the mouth of the great ford.

Bel-atha is reduced to bally and balli in the following names. The ford on the river Erne round which the town of Ballyshannon rose, is called by the annalists, Ath-Seanaigh and Bel-atha-Seanaigh [Bellashanny]; from the latter, the modern name is derived, and it means the mouth of Seanach's or Shannagh's ford, a man's name in common use. The on in Ballyshannon is a modern corruption; the people call the town Ballyshanny, which is nearer the original; and in an Inquisition of James I., it is given with perfect correctness, Bealashanny. Ballyshannon, in Kildare, west of Kilcullen Bridge, is also called in Irish, Ath-Seanaigh (Four Masters), Seanach's ford; and the present name was formed, as in case of the northern town by prefixing Bel. It appears from a record in the Annals of Ulster, that this place in Kildare was also called Uchba.

There is a ford on the river Boro, in Wexford, called Bel-atha-Borumha, which preserves the memory of the well-known Borumha or cow tribute, long exacted from the kings of Leinster by the monarchs of Ireland (see p. 147). From the latter part of the name, Borumha [Boru], this river—so lovingly commemorated in Mr. Kennedy's interesting book, "The banks of the Boro"—derives its name. The ford is called Bealaborowe in an Inquisition of Charles I., and in the modern form Ballyboro, it gives name to a townland. Ballylicky, on the road from Glengarriff to Bantry, in Cork, where the river Ouvane enters Bantry Bay, is called in Irish Bel-atha-lice, the ford-mouth of the flag stone, and whoever has seen it will acknowledge the appropriateness of the name. All the places called Bellanalack, derive their names from similar fords.

When a river spread widely over a craggy or rugged spot, the rough shallow ford thus formed, was often called scairbh [scarriv], or, as O'Reilly spells it, scirbh. A ford of this kind on a small river in Clare, gave name to the little town of Scarriff; and there are several townlands of the same name in Cork, Kerry, and Galway. Near Newtownhamilton, in Armagh, there are two adjoining townlands called Skerriff; and the same term is found shortened in Scarna-geeragh, in Monaghan, the shallow ford of the sheep.

The syllable ach is sometimes added to this word in the colloquial language, making scairbheach [scarvagh], which has the same meaning as the original; this derivative is represented by Scarva, the name of a village in Down; Scarvy, in Monaghan; and Scaragh, in Tipperary and Cork.

In the end of names, when the word occurs in the genitive, it is usually, though not always, anglicised scarry, as in Ballynascarry, in Westmeath and Kilkenny, the town of the ford; and Lackanascarry, in Limerick, the flagstones of the shallow ford. A ford of this kind, where the old road crosses the Cookstown river, gave name to Enniskerry, in Wicklow. This spot is truly described by the term scairbh, being rugged and stony even now; the natives call it An-naskerry, and its Irish name is obviously Ath-na-scairbhe—the ford of the scarriff, or rough river-crossing.

The word fearsad is applied to a sandbank formed near the mouth of a river, by the opposing currents of tide and stream, which at low water often formed a firm, and comparatively safe passage across. The term is pretty common, especially in the west, where these farsets are of considerable importance, as in many places they serve the inhabitants instead of bridges. Colgan translates the word, "vadum vel trajectus."

A sandbank of this kind across the mouth of the Lagan gave name to Belfast, which is called in Irish authorities Bel-feirsdē, the ford of the farset; and the same name, in the uncontracted form Belfarsad, occurs in Mayo. There is now a bridge over the old sandbank that gave name to the village of Farsid, near Aghada, on Cork harbour: the origin of this name is quite forgotten, and the people call it Farside, and interpret it as an English word; but the name of the adjacent townland of Ballynafarsid proves, if proof were necessary, that it took its name from a farset. On the river Swilly, where it narrows near Letterkenny, there was a farset which in old times was evidently an important pass, for the Four Masters record several battles fought near it: it is now called Farsetmore, and it can still be crossed at low water.

A kish or kesh, in Irish ceis, is a kind of causeway made of wickerwork, and sometimes of boughs of trees, and brambles, across a small river, a marsh, or a deep bog. The word means primarily wicker or basket work; and to this day, in some parts of Ireland, they measure and sell turf by the kish, which originally meant a large wicker basket. These wickerwork bridges, or kishes, were formerly very common in every part of Ireland, and are so still in some districts. The Four Masters record, at 1483, that O'Donnell on a certain occasion constructed a ceas-aighdroichet or wicker bridge across the Blackwater, in Tyrone, for his army; and when they had crossed, he let the bridge float down the stream. The memory of this primitive kind of bridge is preserved in many places by the names.

This word appears in its simple form in Kesh, a small town in Fermanagh; and in Kish, a townland near Arklow; and I suppose the Kish light, outside Dublin bay, must have been originally floated on a wicker framework. A causeway of brambles and clay made across a marsh, not far from a high limestone rock, gave name to the village of Keshcarrigan in Leitrim, the kesh of the little rock. There is a place not far from Mallow, called Annakisha (Ath-na- cisē), the ford of the wickerwork causeway—a name that points clearly to the manner in which the ford on the river was rendered passable.

Sometimes ceiseach, or in English kishagh, is the form used, and this in fact is rather more common than kish: we find it as Kisha, near Wexford; and the same form is preserved in Kishaboy (boy, yellow), in Armagh. Other modifications are seen in Casey Glebe, in Donegal; Cassagh, in Kilkenny; and in Cornakessagh, in Fermanagh, the round hill of the wicker causeway. Kishoge, little kish, is the name of a place near Lucan, in Dublin.

Those wickerwork causeways were also often designated by the word cliath [clee], which primarily means a hurdle; the diminutive clethnat glosses tigillum in the Sg. MS. of Zeuss (Gram. Celt., p. 282); and it is cognate with Lat. clitellæ and Fr. claie. An artificial ford of this kind was constructed across the Liffey (see p. 43) in very early ages; and the city that subsequently sprung up round it, was from this circumstance called Ath-cliath [Ah-clee], the ford of hurdles, which was the ancient name of Dublin. This is the name still used by speakers of Irish in every part of Ireland; but they join it to Bally—Baile-atha-cliath (which they pronounce Blaa-clee), the town of the hurdle ford.

The present name, Dublin, is written in the annals Duibh-linn, which in some of the Latin Lives of the Saints, is translated nigra therma, i. e. black pool; it was originally the name of that part of the Liffey on which the city is built, and is sufficiently descriptive at the present day. Duibh-linn is sounded Duvlin or Divlin, and it was undoubtedly so pronounced down to a comparatively recent period, by speakers of both English and Irish; for in old English writings, as well as on Danish coins, we find the name written Divlin, Dyflin, &c., and even yet the Welsh call it Dinas Dulin. The present name has been formed by the restoration of the aspirated b (see p. 41, supra).

There are several other places through Ireland called Duibhlinn, but the aspiration of the b is observed in all, and consequently not one of them has taken the anglicised form Dublin. Devlin is the name of eight townlands in Donegal, Mayo, and Monaghan; Dowling occurs near Fiddown in Kilkenny, Doolin in Clare, and Ballindoolin, the town of the black-pool, in Kildare.

In several of these cases, the proper name was Ath-cliath, hurdle ford; and they received their present names merely in imitation of Dublin; for, as the people when speaking Irish, always called the metropolis, Baile-atha-cliath, and in English, Dublin, they imagined that the latter was a translation of the former, and translated the names of their own places accordingly.

A row of stepping stones across a ford on a river, is called in every part of Ireland by the name of clochan. This mode of rendering a river fordable was as common in ancient, as it is in modern, times; for, in the tract of Brehon Laws, in the Book of Ballymote, regulating the stipend of various kinds of artificers, it is stated that the builder of a clochan is to be paid two cows for his labour.

The Irish name of the Giants' Causeway is Clochan-na-bhFomharaigh [Cloghanavowry], i. e. the stepping stones or causeway of the Fomorians (see p. 151); and as those pirates were magnified into giants in popular legend, the name came to be translated "Giants' Causeway."

These stepping stones have given names to places in all parts of Ireland, now called Cloghan, Cloghane, and Cloghaun, the first being more common in the north, and the two last in the south. Cloghanaskaw, in Westmeath, was probably so called from a ford shaded with trees, for the name signifies the stepping stones of the shade or shadow; Cloghanleagh, grey stepping stones, was the old name of Dunglow in Donegal, and the grey old cloghan is still there; Cloghanenagleragh, in Kerry, the stepping stones of the clergy.

Clochan is sometimes applied to a stone castle, and in some of the names containing this root, it is to be understood in this sense. And in Cork and Kerry it is also used to denote an ancient stone house of a beehive shape.

When there were no means of making a river fordable, there remained the never failing resource of swimming. When rivers had to be crossed in this manner, certain points seem to have been selected, which, either because the stream was narrower there than elsewhere, or that it was less dangerous on account of the stillness of the water, or that the shape of the banks afforded peculiar facilities, were considered more suitable than others for swimming across. Such spots were often designated by the word snamh [snauv], which literally means swimming; a word often met with in our old historical writings in the sense of a swimming ford, and which forms part of several of our present names.

Lixnaw on the river Brick, in Kerry, is called in the Four Masters Lic-snamha [Licksnawa], the flagstone of the swimming; the name probably indicating that there was a large stone on the bank, from which the swimmers were accustomed to fling themselves off; and Portnasnow, near Enniskillen, (port a bank), is a name of similar origin. About midway between Glengarriff and Bantry, the traveller crosses Snave bridge, where, before the erection of the bridge, the deep creek at the mouth of the Coomhola river must have been generally crossed by swimming. When the article is used with this word snamh, the s is eclipsed by t, as we see in Carrigatna, in Kilkenny, which is in Irish, Carraig-a'-tsnamha, the rock of the swimming. In the north of Ireland, the n of this construction is replaced by r, as in Ardatrave, in Fermanagh, Ard-a'-tsnamha, the height of the swimming (see p. 74, supra).

A weir across a river, either for fishing, or to divert a mill stream, is called in Irish, cora or coradh [curra]. Brian Borumha's palace of Kincora, was built on a hill in the present town of Killaloe, and it is repeatedly mentioned in the annals, by the name of Ceann-coradh, the head or hill of the weir; from which we may infer, that there was a fishing weir across the Shannon at this point, from very early times. There is another Kincora in King's County, in which was a castle mentioned by the Four Masters, and called by the same Irish name. And we find Tikincor in Waterford, the house at the head of the weir.

Ballinacor in Glenmalure, in Wicklow, which gives name to two baronies, is called in the Leabhar Branach, Baile-na-corra, the town of the weir. There are several other places of the same name in Wicklow and Westmeath; and it is modified to Ballinacur in Wexford, and to Ballinacurra or Ballynacorra in several counties, the best known place of the name being Ballynacorra on Cork harbour.

“The origin of stone bridges in Ireland is not very accurately ascertained; but this much at least appears certain, that none of any importance were erected previous to the twelfth century" (Petrie, "Dub. Pen. Journal," I., 150). Drochat, or, as it is written in modern Irish, droichead [drohed], is the word universally employed to denote a bridge, and under this name, bridges are mentioned in our oldest authorities; but it is almost certain that these structures were of wood, and that bridges with stone arches were not built till after the arrival of the Anglo-Normans.

Many places in Ireland have taken their names from bridges, and the word droichead is often greatly modified by modern corruption. It is to be observed that the point chosen for the erection of a bridge, was very usually where the river had previously been crossed by a ford; and there are places whose names preserve the memory of this, of which Drogheda is a good example. This place is repeatedly mentioned in old authorities, and always called Droichead-atha [Drohed-aha], the bridge of the ford, from which the present name was easily formed.

There is a townland in Kildare callad Drehid, and another in Londonderry, called Droghed; Drehid-tarsna (cross-bridge) is a parish in Limerick; Ballydrehid and Ballindrehid, the town of the bridge, are the names of some townlands, the same as Ballindrait, in Donegal. The word is obscured in Knockadreet, the hill of the bridge, in Wicklow, which same name is correctly anglicised Knockadrehid, in Roscommon. A like difference is observable between Drumadrehid and Drumadried, the ridge of the bridge, the former in Clare, and the latter in Antrim. The parish of Kildrought, in Kildare, took its name from a bridge over the Liffey, the Irish form being Cill-droichid, the church of the bridge. Though the parish retains the old name, that of the original spot is changed by an incorrect translation ; the first part was altered to Cel, and the last part translated, forming Celbridge, the name of a well known town. What renders this more certain is, that the place is called Kyldroghet, in an Inquisition of William and Mary.

CHAPTER VI.

ROADS AND CAUSEWAYS.

“ACCORDING to the Irish annals, and other fragments of our native history, the ancient Irish had many roads which were cleaned and kept in repair according to law. The different terms used to denote road, among the ancient Irish, are thus defined in Cormac’s Glossary, from which a pretty accurate idea may be formed of their nature” (O’Donovan, Book of Rights, Introd. p. lvi.) O’Donovan then quotes Cormac’s enumeration of the different terms, several of which are still used. According to the Dinnsenchus, there were anciently five great roads leading to Tara, from five different directions ; and it would appear from several authorities, that they were constructed in the reign of Felimý the lawgiver, in the second century (see p. 119, supra). Besides these great highways, numerous other roads are mentioned in our annals and tales, many of which are enumerated in O’Donovan’s valuable introduction to the Book of Rights.

Among the different Irish words to denote a road, the most common and best known is bóthar [bōher] ; and its diminutive bohereen is almost on the eve of acknowledgment as an English word. It originally meant a road for cattle, being derived from bo, a cow; and Cormac defines its breadth to be such that "two cows fit upon it, one lengthwise, the other athwart, and their calves and yearlings fit on it along with them."

The word is scarcely used at all in Ulster; but in the other provinces, the anglicised forms Boher, and Bohereen, or Borheen, constitute part of a great number of names, and they are themselves the names of several places. There is a townland in Galway called Bohercuill, the road of the hazel; and this same name becomes Boherkyle in Kilkenny, Boherkill in Kildare, and Boherquill in Westmeath; while with the diminutive, it is found as Bohereenkyle in Limerick.

Sometimes the word is contracted to one syllable; as we find, for instance, in Borleagh, and Bornacourtia, in Wexford, grey road, and the road of the court or mansion; and Borderreen, in King's County, the road of the little wood. When the word occurs as a termination, the b is often aspirated (p. 19), as in the common townland name, Ballinvoher, the town of the road; and in this case, we also sometimes find it contracted, as in Cartronbore, near Granard, the quarter-land of the road. For the change of bothar to batter, see p. 42, supra.

Slighe or Sligheadh [slee] was anciently applied by the Irish to the largest roads; the five great roads leading to Tara, for instance, were called by this name. The word is still in common use in the vernacular, but it has not entered very extensively into names.

Slee, near Enniskillen, preserves the exact pronunciation of the original word; Clonaslee, a village in Queen's County, is the meadow of the road; Bru-slee, in Antrim, indicates that a brugh or mansion stood near the old road; and Sleemanagh, near Castletownroche, in Cork, is middle road. Sleehaun, little road, is the name of some places in Longford and Donegal; and in Roscommon we find Cornasleehan, the round hill of the little road.

Bealach [ballagh], signifies a road or pass. It forms part of the well-known battle cry of the 88th, Connaught Rangers, Fág-a'-bealach, clear the road. Ballagh, the usual modern form, constitutes or begins the names of a number of places; near several of these the ancient roadways may be traced; and in some cases they are still used. Ballaghboy, yellow road, was formerly the name of several old highways, and is still retained by a number of townlands. Ballaghmoone, two miles north of Carlow, where the battle in which Cormac Mac Cullenan was killed, was fought in the year 903, is called in the Book of Leinster, Bealach-Mughna, Mughan's or Mooan's pass, but we know not who this Mughan was.

The great road from Tara to the south-west, called Slighe Dala, is still remembered in the name of a townland in Queen's County, which enables us to identify at least one point in its course. This road was also called Ballaghmore Moy-dala (the great road of the plain of the conference), and the first part of this old name is retained by the townland of Ballaghmore, near Stradbally. There are several other places in Leinster and Munster called Ballaghmore, but none with such interesting associations as this.

Several other well-known places retain the memory of those old bealachs. Ballaghaderreen, in Mayo, is called in Irish Bealach-a'-doirín, the road of the little oak wood; the village of Ballaghkeen, in Wexford, was originally called Bealach-caein, beautiful road; and Ballaghkeeran, near Athlone, must have been formerly shaded with keerans or quicken trees.

When this word occurs as a termination, it is very often changed to vally by the aspiration of the b, and the disappearance of the final guttural. There are townlands scattered through the four provinces called Ballinvally, and Ballyvally, the town of the road, which in Limerick is made Ballinvallig, by the restoration of the final g (p. 30). So also Moyvally, the name of a place in Carlow, and of another in Kildare—the latter a station on the Midland railway—the plain or field of the road. The word has another form still in Revallagh, near Coleraine, clear or open (reidh) road—so called, no doubt, to distinguish it from some other road difficult of passage.

Casán signifies a path. It is a term that does not often occur, but we find a few places to which it gives names; such as Cassan, in Fermanagh; Cussan, in Kilkenny; and Cossaun, near Athenry, in Galway—all of which mean simply “path:” the same name is corrupted to Carsan, in Monaghan; and the plural, Cussana (paths), is the name of two townlands in Kilkenny. Ardnagassan, near Donegal, and Ardnagassane, in Tipperary, are both called in the original Ard-na-gcasan, the height of the paths.

It is curious that the river Cashen, in Kerry, derives its name from this word. It is called Cashen as far as it is navigable for curraghs, i. e. up to the junction of the Feale and the Brick; and its usual name in the annals is Casán-Kerry, i. e. the path to Kerry—being as it were the high road to that ancient territory. But the term was also applied to other streams. The mouth of the Ardee river, in Louth, was anciently called Casán-Linne (“Circuit of Ireland”); and the village of Annagassan partly preserves this old name—Ath-na-gcasan, the ford of the paths—probably in reference to the two rivers, Glyde and Dee, which join near the village" (see Dr. Todd in "Wars of GG.," Introd., p. lxii. note l).

In early ages, before the extension of cultivation and drainage, the roads through the country must have often been interrupted by bogs and morasses, which, when practicable, were made passable by causeways. They were variously constructed; but the materials were generally branches of trees, bushes, earth, and stones, placed in alternate layers, and trampled down till they were sufficiently firm; and they were called by the Irish name of tóchar.

These tóchars were very common all over the country; our annals record the construction of many in early ages; and some of these are still traceable. They have given names to a number of townlands and villages, several of them called Togher, and many others containing the word in combination. Ballintogher, the town of the causeway, is a very usual name; and Templetogher (the church of the togher), in Galway, was so called from a celebrated causeway across a bog, whose situation is still well known to the inhabitants.

CHAPTER VII.

MILLS AND KILNS.

MANY authorities concur in showing that water mills were known in this country in very remote ages, and that they were even more common in ancient than in modern times. We know from the lives of the Irish saints, that several of them erected mills where they settled, shortly after the introduction of Christianity, as St. Senanus, St. Ciaran, St. Mochua, St. Fechin, &c.; and in some cases mills still exist on the very sites selected by the original founders—as, for instance, at Fore, in Westmeath, where “St. Fechin’s mill” works as busily to-day as it did twelve hundred years ago. We may infer, moreover, from several grants and charters of the eleventh and twelfth centuries, that, where circumstances permitted, a mill was a usual appendage to a ballybetagh, or ancient townland.

It appears certain that water mills were used in Ireland before the introduction of Christianity. For we have reliable historical testimony, that Cormac mac Art, monarch of Ireland in the third century, sent across the sea for a millwright, who constructed a mill on the stream of Nith, which flowed from the well of Neamhnach [Navnagh], at Tara. “The ancient Irish authorities all agree in stating that this was the first mill ever erected in Ireland; and it is remarkable that this circumstance is still most vividly preserved by tradition, not only in the neighbourhood, where a mill still occupies its site, but also in most parts of Ireland. Tradition adds that it was from the king of Scotland the Irish monarch obtained the millwright, and it can be shown that the probability of its truth is strongly corroborated by that circumstance.”*

The Irish word for a mill is muilenn [mullen], and this term exists in several of the Indo-European languages:—Sansc. malana, the action of grinding; Lat. molo, to grind; Goth. malan; Eng. mill. A very considerable number of places in Ireland have taken their names from mills, and the most usual anglicised form of muilenn is Mullen or Mullin.

* From the Ordnance memoir of the parish of Templemore. See also O’Donovan’s article on the antiquity of corn in Ireland in the Dublin Penny Journal; and Petrie’s Essay on Tara.

Mullenakill, in Armagh, and Mullennakill in Kilkenny, are both in Irish, Muilenn-na-cille, the mill of the church; and Mullinavat, in the latter county, is Muilenn-a'-bhata, the mill of the stick. When this word occurs as a termination the m is often changed to w by aspiration (p. 19), as in Mawillian in Londonderry, Magh-mhuilinn, the plain of the mill. Ballywillen is the name of a parish on the borders of Antrim and Londonderry, and of several townlands in these and other counties, while the form Ballinwillin is very frequent in some of the southern counties; this name signifies the town of the mill, and it is often translated, from which has originated the very common name of Milltown.

A quern or hand mill is designated by the word bro, which is also applied to the mill stones used with water mills; genitive brón or bróin [brone], plural bróinte [broanty]. We find this word in the names of several places, where it is likely there were formerly water mills or hand mills, the owners of which made their living by grinding their neighbours' corn. Coolnabrone, the hill-back of the quern or mill-stone, is the name of two townlands in Kilkenny; and in the same county near Fiddown, is Tobernabrone, the well of the quern.

Before the potato came into general use, it was customary for families—those especially who were not within easy reach of a mill—to grind their own corn for home consumption; and the quern was consequently, an instrument of very general use. We may presume that there were professional quern makers; and we know for a certainty, that some places received names from producing stones well suited for querns. Such a place is Carrigeenamronety, a hill near Ballyorgan, in Limerick, on whose side there is a ridge of rocks, formerly much resorted to by the peasantry for quern stones; its Irish name is Carraigín-na-mbrointe, the little rock of the mill-stones; and there are other rocks of the same name in Limerick. So also Bronagh in Leitrim, i. e. a place abounding in mill stones.

Aith [āh] denotes a kiln of any kind, whether a lime-kiln or a kiln for drying corn. It is generally found in the end of names, joined with na, the gen. fem. of the article, followed by h, by which it is distinguished from ath, a ford, which takes an in the genitive. There are several places in Monaghan and Armagh, called Annahaia and Annahagh, all of which are from the Irish, Ath-na-haithe, the ford of the kiln; we find Ballynahaha, in Limerick, and Ballynahahaia, in Cavan, (Bally, a town); in Antrim, Lisnahay (fort); Gortnahey in Londonderry, Gortnahaha in Clare and Tipperary, and Aughnahoy in Antrim, all of which signify the field of the kiln.

PART IV.

NAMES DESCRIPTIVE OF PHYSICAL FEATURES.

CHAPTER I.

MOUNTAINS, HILLS, AND ROCKS.

IN this country, as in most others, a large proportion of the territorial names are derived from those of hills. For hills, being the most conspicuous physical features, are naturally often fixed upon, in preference to others, to designate the districts in which they stand. There are at least twenty-five words in the Irish language for a hill, besides many others to denote rocks, points, slopes, and cliffs; and all without exception have impressed themselves on the nomenclature of the country. Many of these are well distinguished one from another, each being applied to a hill of some particular shape or formation; but several, though they may have been formerly different in meaning, are now used synonymously, so that it is impossible to make any distinction between them. I will here enumerate them, and illustrate the manner in which names are formed from each.

Sliabh [sleeve] signifies a mountain; and, according to O'Brien, it was sometimes applied to any heathland, whether mountain or plain. It occurs in the Zeuss MSS. in the old Irish form sliab, which glosses mons. The word, in the anglicised form of slieve, is applied to great numbers of the principal mountains in Ireland; and it is almost always followed by a limiting term, such as an adjective or a noun in the genitive case. For example, Slievesnaght, the name of a mountain in Innishowen, and of several others in different parts of the country, represents the Irish Sliabh-sneachta, the mountain of the snow; Slieve Anierin, in Leitrim, Sliabh-an-iarainn, the mountain of the iron, in allusion to its well-known richness in iron ore; Slieve Bernagh, in the east of Clare, gapped mountain.

This word is occasionally so very much disguised in modern names, that it is difficult to recognise it, and of such names I will give a few examples. There is a mountain west of Lough Arrow, in Sligo, called Bricklieve, the proper Irish name of which is Breicshliabh (Four Mast.), speckled mountain, and the s has disappeared by aspiration. The same thing occurs in Finliff, in Down, white mountain; in Gortinlieve, in Donegal, the little field of the mountain; and in Beglieve, in Cavan, small mountain. The parish of Killevy, in Armagh, took its name from an old church situated at the foot of Slieve Gullion, which the annalists usually call Cill-shleibhe, i. e. the church of the mountain, the pronunciation of which is well preserved in the modern spelling.

Sometimes the v sound is omitted altogether, and this often happens when the word comes in as a termination. Sleamaine, in Wicklow, is anglicised from Sliabh-meadhoin, middle mountain; Illaunslee, in Kerry, the island of the mountain. Slemish, in Antrim, is well known as the mountain where St. Patrick passed his early days as a slave, herding swine; the full Irish name is Sliabh-Mis, the mountain of Mis, a woman's name; and there is another almost equally celebrated mountain in Kerry, of the same name, now called Slieve Mish.

In other cases both the s and v are lost, as for example in Crotlie or Cratie, the name of several hills, Croit-shliabh, hump-backed mountain. In a great many cases the sound of s is changed to that of t by eclipse (p. 22), as in Ballintlea, the name of about fifteen townlands in the Munster and Leinster counties, Baile-an-tsleibhe, the town of the mountain; the same name as Ballintleva in Galway and Mayo, Ballintlevy in Westmeath, and Ballintlieve, in Meath and Down.

The plural sleibhte [sleaty] appears in Sleaty, a celebrated church giving name to a village and parish in Queen's County. There can be no doubt as to the original form and meaning of this name, as it is written Sleibhte by all Irish authorities, and Colgan translates it Montes, i. e. mountains. The name must have been originally given to the church from its contiguity to the hills of Slieve Margy, as Killeavy was called so, from its proximity to Slieve Gullion.

Sleibhín [slayveen], a diminutive of sliabh, is applied to a little hill; in modern nomenclature it is usually made Sleveen, which is the name of a hill rising over Macroon in Cork, of a village in Waterford, and of nine townlands, chiefly in the southern counties. Slevin in Roscommon, is the same word; and Slevinagee in the same county, signifies the little mountain of the wind.

Cnoc signifies a hill; its most common anglicised form is knock, in which the k is usually silent, but in the original, the first c, which the k represents, was sounded [cnoc, pron. künnuck, the first u very short]. There is a conspicuous isolated hill near Ballingarry, in Limerick, called Knockfierna, a noted fairy haunt. It serves as a weather glass to the people of the circumjacent plains, who can predict with certainty, whether the day will be wet or dry by the appearance of the summit in the morning; and hence the mountain is called Cnoc-fírinne, the hill of truth, i. e. of truthful prediction. Knockea is the name of a hill near Glenosheen, three miles south from Kilfinnane in Limerick, and of several townlands, all which are called in Irish Cnoc-Aedha, Aedh's or Hugh's hill, probably from some former proprietors. The well known hill of Knocklayd in Antrim was so called from its shape, Cnoc-leithid [Knocklehid], literally the hill of breadth, i. e. broad hill.

The diminutives Knockan, Knockaun, Knockeen, and Knickeen, with their plurals, form the names of more than seventy townlands, all so called from a "little hill." There are about 1800 townland names that begin with Knock, and more than fifty with Crock, which is the same word corrupted (p. 47).

Cnuic, the genitive of cnoc, is often made knick and nick in the present names, while the diminutive cnuicín is sometimes represented by knickeen; and these modern forms give correctly the pronunciation of the originals—except of course, the silent k. Thus Ballyknick in the parish of Grange, Armagh, which is the same as the very common name, Ballyknock, the town of the hill; Tinnick in Wexford, and Ticknick on the side of the Three Rock mountain in Dublin, Tigh-cnuic, the house of the hill, which under another form, Ticknock, is the name of several townlands in the eastern counties.

Beann [ban], genitive and plural, beanna [banna], signifies a horn, a gable, a peak, or pointed hill, but it is often applied to any steep hill: cognate with Latin pinna. In anglicised names, it is generally spelled ben or bin, each of which begins about thirty townland names; but it undergoes various other modifications.

Beann is not applied to great mountains so much in Ireland as in Scotland, where they have Ben Lomond, Ben Nevis, Benledi, &c.; but as applied to middle and smaller eminences, it is used very extensively. There is a steep hill in Westmeath, called the Ben (i. e. the peak) of Fore, from the village near its base; the Irish name of Bengore Head in Antrim is Beann-gabhar, the peak of the goats. Benburb, now the name of a village in Tyrone, the scene of the battle in 1646, was originally applied to the remarkable cliff overhanging the Blackwater, on which the castle ruins now stand; the Irish name as given in the annals, is Beann-borb, which O'Sullivan Bear correctly translates Pinna superba, the proud peak.

The Twelve Pins, a remarkable group of mountains in Connemara, derive their name from the same word; Pins being a modification of Bens. They are commonly called "The Twelve Pins of Bunnabeola," in which the word beann occurs twice; for Bunnabeola is Beanna-Beola, the peaks of Beola. This Beola, who was probably an old Firbolg chieftain, is still vividly remembered in tradition; and a remarkable person he must have been, for the place of his interment is also commemorated, namely, Toombeola, Beola's tumulus, which is a townland south of the Twelve Pins.

The adjective form beannach is applied to a hilly place—a place full of bens or peaks; and it has given name to Bannagh in Cork, and to Benagh in Down and Louth. This word appears in Bannaghbane and Bannaghroe (white, red) in Monaghan; and Aghavannagh, Irish Achadh-bheannach, hilly field, is the name of three townlands in Wicklow. The plural, beanna, is found in Bannamore and Benamore in Tipperary, great peaks; and in the form Banna, it occurs several times in Kerry. Benbo, a conspicuous mountain near Manorhamilton, is written by the Four Masters, Beanna-bo, the peaks of the cows, and it is still called in Irish by the same name.

The word assumes various other forms, and enters into many combinations, of which the following names will be a sufficient illustration. The old name of Dunmanway in Cork, was Dun-na-mbeann [Dunnaman: Four Mast.], the fortress of the gables or pinnacles; and the name was probably derived from the ridge of rocks north of the town, or perhaps from the shape of the old dun. In a grant made in the time of Elizabeth, the place is called Downemanvoy, from which, as well indeed as from the tradition of the inhabitants, it appears that the last syllable, way—which must be a modern addition, as it does not appear in the older documents—is a corruption of the Irish buidhe, yellow (b changed to w by aspiration: p. 19)—Dunmanway, the fortress of the yellow pinnacles. Dunnaman, which is a correct anglicised form of Dun-na-mbeann, is still the name of a townland in Down, and of another near Croom in Limerick. Ballyvangour in Carlow, is in Irish, Baile-bheanna-gabhar, the town of the pinnacle of the goats; Knockbine in Wexford, the hill of the peak; Dunnavenney in Londonderry, the fortress of the peak.

The word has several diminutive forms, the most common of which is beinnín [benneen], which gives name to several mountains now called Binnion or Bignion, i. e. small peak. Another diminutive, beannachán, appears in Meenavanaghan in Donegal, the meen or mountain flat of the small peak.

Beannchar or beannchor [banagher] is a modification of beann, and signifies horns, or pointed hills or rocks, and sometimes simply a peaked hill; it is a word of frequent topographical use in different parts of Ireland, and it is generally anglicised banagher or bangor. Banagher, in King's County (Beannchor, Four Mast.) is said to have taken its name from the sharp rocks in the Shannon; and there are seven townlands in different counties bearing the same name.

Bangor, in Down, is written Beannchar by various authorities, and Keating and others account for the name by a legend; but the circumstance that there are so many Beannchars in Ireland renders this of no authority; and there is a hill near the town, from which it is more likely that the place received its name. Coolbanagher, or Whitechurch, a church giving name to a parish in Queen's County, where Aengus the Culdee began his celebrated Feliré (see p. 147), is written in Irish authorities, Cuilbeannchair, the angle or corner of the pinnacles. "There is a Lough Banagher (the lake of the pinnacles) in Donegal; Drum-banagher in Armagh; Movanagher on the Bann, parish of Kilrea, Derry (Magh-bheannchair, the plain of the pinnacles); and the ancient church of Ross-bennchuir (Ross, a wood), placed by Archdall in the county of Clare" (Reeves, Ecclesiastical Antiquities, p. 199, where the word beannchar is exhaustively discussed).

Ard is sometimes a noun meaning a height or hill, and sometimes an adjective, signifying high: cognate with Lat. arduus. In both senses it enters extensively into Irish nomenclature; it forms the beginning of about 650 townland names, and there are at least as many more that contain it otherwise combined.

There is a little town in Waterford, and about twenty-six townlands in different counties, called Ardmore, great height; but only two bear the correlative name, Ardbeg, little height. Ardglass, in Down, is called Ard-glas by the Four Masters, i. e. green height; which is also a usual townland name; and there are many places scattered over the country, called Ardkeen, that is, Ard-caein, beautiful height.

This word has two diminutives, airdín and ardán [ardeen, ardaun]; the former is not much in use, but it gives name to some places in Cork and Kerry, called Ardeen, and it forms a part of a few other names. The latter, under the different forms Ardan, Ardane, and Ardaun, all meaning little height or hillock, is by itself the name of several places in the midland counties; and it helps to form many others, such as Ardanreagh, in Limerick, grey hillock; and Killinardan, near Tallaght, in Dublin, the church or wood of the little height.

Leath-ard [lahard], which means literally half height, is used topographically to denote a gently sloping eminence; and the anglicised form Lahard, and the diminutives Lahardan, Lahardane, and Lahardau, are the names of many places, chiefly in Connaught and Munster. Derrylahard, the oak wood of the gentle hill, occurs near Skull in Cork, and the same name, in the shortened form, Derrylard, is found in the parish of Tartaraghan, Armagh.

The word alt primarily denotes a height, cognate with Lat. altus; but in its present topographical application, it is generally understood to mean a cliff, or the side of a glen. It is pretty generally spread throughout the country, forming the first syllable of about 100 townland names, which are distributed over the four provinces. Alt stands alone as the name of some places in Mayo and Donegal; and Alts (heights or glen sides) occurs in Monaghan. Altachullion, in Cavan, is the cliff of the holly; in Limerick and Queen's county we have Altavilla, Alt-a'-bhile, the glen-side of the old tree; Altinure, in Derry and Cavan, the cliff of the yew.

There is a place in the parish of Tulloghobegly, Donegal, called Altan, little cliff; and the plural Altans occurs in Sligo. Altanagh, in Tyrone, signifies a place abounding in cliffs or glens. In the end of names, this word is sometimes made alta, and sometimes ilt, representing two forms of the genitive, alta and ailt, as we see in Lissanalta, in Limerick, the fort of the height; and Tonanilt, in Cavan, the backside of the cliff.

The primary meaning of cruach is a rick or stack, such as a stack of corn or hay; but in an extended sense, it is applied to hills, especially to those presenting a round, stacked, or piled up appearance. It is used pretty extensively as a local term, generally in the forms Croagh or Crogh; and the diminutive Cruachán is still more common, giving names to numerous mountains, townlands, and parishes, called Croaghan, Croaghaun, Croghan, and Crohane, all originally applied to a round-shaped hill.

Croghan hill, in King's County, was anciently called Bri-Eilē, the hill of Eilē, sister of Maev, queen of Connaught in the first century (see p. 117 supra); it afterwards received the name of Cruachan, and in the annals it is sometimes called Cruachan-Bri-Eile, which looks tautological, as Cruachan and Bri both signify a hill. Croaghan, near Killashandra in Cavan, the inauguration place of the O'Rourkes, is often mentioned in the Irish authorities by two names—Cruachan O'Cuproin, O'Cupron's round hill, and Cruachan-Mic-Tighearnain, from the Mac Tighearnans or Mac Kiernans, the ancient possessors of the barony of Tullyhunco, the chief of whom had his residence there.

The parish of Cruagh, six miles south of Dublin, takes its name from Cruagh hill, which is within its boundary. The word is somewhat disguised in Ballycrogue, the name of a parish in Carlow, the same as Ballycroghan, near Bangor, in Down, only that in the latter the diminutive is used. Kilcruaig, a townland near Ballyorgan, in the south-east of Limerick, obviously got its name, which means the church of the round hill, from the detached mountain now called Carrigeenamronety, on whose side the place in question lies.

Tulach, a hill. It is anglicised Tulla, Tullow, and Tullagh, but most commonly Tully (see p. 33). Tullanavert, near Clogher, in Tyrone, represents Tulach-na-bhfeart, the hill of the graves; Tullaghacullion, near Killybegs, Tullaghcullion, near Donegal, and Tullycullion, in Tyrone, the hill of the holly. The parish of Tully near Kingstown, in Dublin, was anciently called Tulach-na-nespuc, which signifies the hill of the bishops; and according to the Life of St. Brigid, it received this name from seven bishops who lived there, and on one occasion visited the saint at Kildare (O'Curry, Lect., p. 382). Tullymongan, the name of two townlands near Cavan, was originally applied to the hill over the town now called Gallows Hill; the Four Masters call it Tulach-Mongain, the hill of Mongan, a man's name.

The parish of Kiltullagh, in Roscommon, was so called from an old church, the name of which perfectly describes its situation—Cill-tulaigh, the church of the hill; and this is also the name of a parish in Galway, and of some townlands. In the Munster counties, the g in tulaigh is pronounced hard, giving rise to a new form Tullig, which is found in the names of many places, the greater number being in Cork and Kerry.

There are two diminutive forms in use, tulán and tulachán. From the former comes Tullen, in Roscommon, Tullin, near Athlone, and Tullans, near Coleraine; but the other is more common, and gives origin to Tullaghan, Tullaghaun, and Tullaghans (little hills), found in several counties as the names of townlands and villages. The word is sometimes spelled in Irish, tealach [tallagh], which orthography is often adopted by the Four Masters; this form appears in the name of Tallow, a town in Waterford, which is called in Irish Tealach-an-iarainn [Tallow-anierin], the hill of the iron, from the iron mines worked there by the great earl of Cork.

Bri [bree] signifies a hill or rising ground, the same as the Scotch word brae. The word occurs frequently as a topographical term in our ancient writings, of which Bri-Eile (p. 354), is an example. Brigown, a village near Mitchelstown, in Cork, once a celebrated ecclesiastical establishment, where are still to be seen the remains of a very ancient church and round tower, is called in Irish, Bri-gobhunn (Book of Lismore), the hill of the smith. In our present names, this word does not occur very often: it is found simply in the form of Bree, in Donegal, Monaghan and Wexford; while in Tyrone it takes the form of Brigh.

Lagh [law] a hill, cognate with Ang. Sax. law, same meaning. It is not given in the dictionaries, but it undoubtedly exists in the Irish language, and has given names to a considerable number of places through the country, of which the following may be taken as examples:—

Portlaw on the Suir, in Waterford, took its name from the steep hill at the head of the village—Portlagha, the bank or landing place of the hill; there are some townlands in Kilkenny and the Munster counties called Ballinla and Ballinlaw, the town of the hill; Luggelaw, in Wicklow, the lug or hollow of the hill, the name of the valley in which is situated the beautiful Lough Tay; Clonderalaw, in Cork and Clare, the meadow between the two hills.

O'Brien explains ceide [kedy] "a hillock, a compact kind of hill, smooth and plain at the top;" and this is the sense in which it is understood at the present day, wherever it is understood at all. The Four Masters write it ceideach, when mentioning Keady-drinagh, in Sligo, which they call Ceideach-droighneach, the flat-topped hill of the black-thorns. The word is not in very general use, and is almost confined to the northern and north-western counties; but in these it gives name to a considerable number of places now called Keadew and Keady. It takes the forms of Keadagh, Cady, and Caddagh, in several counties; the diminutive Keadeen is the name of a high hill east of Baltinglass, in Wicklow; and another modification, Cadian, occurs in Tyrone.

Mullach, in its primary meaning, signifies the top or summit of anything—such as the top of a house. Topographically it is generally used to denote smaller eminences, though we find it occasionally applied to hills of considerable elevation; and as a root word, it enters very extensively into the formation of names, generally in the forms Mulla, Mullagh, Mully, and Mul, which constitute of themselves, or form the beginning of, upwards of 400 names.

The village of Mullagh, in Cavan, got its name from the hill near it, which the Four Masters call Mullach-Laeighill, the hill of Laeighell, or Lyle, a man's name formerly common in Ireland. The Hill of Lloyd, near Kells, is called in the annals Mullach-Aidi, Aíde's hill; and it still retains this same name with those who speak Irish; Mullaghattin, near Carlingford, the hill of the furze; Mullaghsilloagh, near Enniskillen, the hill of the sallops; Mullaghmeen, smooth summit. Mul, the shortened form, appears in Mulboy, in Tyrone, yellow summit; and in Mulkeeragh, in Derry, the summit of the sheep.

Mullan, little summit, is a diminutive of mullach, and it is generally applied to the top of a low, gently sloping hill. In the forms Mullan, Mullaun, and in the plural Mullans, and Mullauns, it is the name of nearly forty townlands, and of course helps to form many others. Glassavullaun, near Tallaght, in Dublin, represents Glaise-a'-mhullain, the streamlet of the little summit; and Mullanagore, in Monaghan, and Mullanagower, in Wexford, signify the little eminence of the goats. In Carlow, Wicklow, and Wexford, this word is understood to mean simply a green field; but it has evidently undergone a change of meaning, the transition being sufficiently easy, from a gentle green hill to a green field. Mulkaun, in Leitrim, exhibits another diminutive, namely, mulcán, or mullachán, which also appears in Ardmulchan, in Meath, the height of the little summit; and in a different form still in Meenawullaghan, in the parish of Inver, Donegal, the meen, or mountain flat of the little summit.

Iomaire [ummera] signifies a ridge or hill-back; as a local term it is found in each of the four provinces, being, however, more common in Ulster and Connaught than in the other provinces; but in any part of Ireland it does not enter extensively into names.

Its most common modern forms are Ummera, Um-mery, and Umry, which form or begin the names of more than twenty townlands.

Ummeracam, in Armagh, and Umrycam, in Donegal and Derry, are called in Irish Iomaire-cam, crooked ridge; Ummeraboy, in Cork, yellow ridge; Um-merafree, in Monaghan, the ridge of the heath. Killanummery, a townland giving name to a parish in Leitrim, is called by the Four Masters Cill-an-iomaire, the church of the ridge; and the word is somewhat altered in Clonamery, in Kilkenny, the meadow of the ridge.

The primary meaning of meall [mäl] is a lump, mass, or heap of anything; and it is applied locally to a small round hillock. It does not occur very often except in Munster, where it is met with pretty extensively; its most usual anglicised form is maul, which begins the names of near sixty townlands, all in Cork and Kerry. Take as examples Maulnahorna, the hillock of the barley; Maulanimirish and Maulashangarry, both near Dunmanway, the first meaning the hillock of the contention (imreas), and the second, of the old garden. Maulagh, near Killarney, signifies a place abounding in hillocks.

Millín [milleen] is a diminutive of this word, usually represented in the present names by Milleen, which forms the whole or the beginning of fifteen townland names, all except one, in Cork. And near Rathcormack there is a place called Maulane, the only example I find of the diminutive in an. In anglicised names it is often difficult to distinguish this word from mael and its modifications, as both often assume the same form.

Mael [mwail, or moyle], as an adjective, signifies bald, bare, or hornless; and it is often employed as a noun to denote anything having these shapes or qualities. It is, for instance, applied to a cow without horns, which in almost every part of Ireland is called a mael, or mweelleen. It is also used synonymously with giolla, to denote, in a religious sense, a person having the head shorn or tonsured; it was often prefixed to the name of a saint, and the whole compound used to denote a person devoted to such a saint; and as a mark of reverence this kind of name was often given to men at their baptism, which originated such surnames as Mulholland, Mulrony, Moloney, Mulrenin, Malone, &c.

It is applied to a church or building of any kind that is either unfinished or dilapidated—most commonly the latter; thus Templemoyle, the bald or dilapidated church, is the name of some places in Derry, Galway, and Donegal; there are five townlands in Antrim, and one in Longford called Kilmoyle, which has the same meaning:—Kilmoyle, near Ballymoney, is in Latin records translated Ecclesia calva, which gives the exact sense. And Castlemoyle, bald castle, occurs in Galway, Wexford, and Tipperary. The word is used to designate a moat or mound flat on top, or dilapidated by having the materials carted away; and hence we have such names as Rathmoyle, Lismoye, and Dunmoyle.

Mael is applied to hills and promontories, and in this sense it is very often employed to form local names. Moyle, one of its usual forms, and the plural Moyles, give names to several places in the middle and northern counties. In the south and west it often assumes the form mweel, which preserves the pronunciation more nearly than moyle: thus Mweelahorna, near Ardmore, in Waterford, the bald hill of the barley; and in Fermanagh also, this form is found in Mweelbane, white hill. It sometimes takes the form of meel, as in Meelshane in Cork, John's bald hill; Meelgarrow, in Wexford, rough hill; Meeldrum, near Kilbeggan, in Westmeath, bare ridge.

There are two diminutives in pretty common use, maelán, and maeilín [mweelaun, mweeleen]; the former is often applied to round backed islands in the sea, or to round bare rocks; and we find accordingly several little islands off the south and west coast, called Moylaun, Moylan, and Mweelaun. The same word is seen in Meelon and Milane, two townlands in Cork. The second diminutive is more frequent, and it is spelled in various ways; it is found as Moyleen and Mweeleen, in Galway, Kerry and Mayo; Mweeling, near Ardmore, in Waterford; and Meeleen, in the parish of Kilquane, Cork.

Meelaghans, near Geashill, in King's County (little bare hills), exhibits another diminutive, Maelachán; and we have still another in Milligan, in Monaghan, and Milligans, in Fermanagh, little hills. Mealach is the name of a townland in the parish of Drumbo, Down, meaning either a round hill or a place abounding in hillocks. In Scotland, the word mael is often used, as for instance, in the Mull of Galloway, and the Mull of Cantire; in both instances, the word Mull signifying a bare headland. From the Mull of Cantire, the sea between Ireland and Scotland was anciently called the "Sea-stream of Moyle;" and Moore has adopted the last name in his charming song "Silent, O Moyle, be the roar of thy water."

Mael combines with the Irish preposition for, forming the compound formaeil, which is used to signify a round hill; and which, in the forms Formoyle, Fermoy, and Formil, constitutes the names of twenty-nine townlands, scattered through the four provinces; in Meath it is made Formal, and in Galway it retains the more Irish form, Formweel. This name occurs twice in the Four Masters ; first at 965, where a battle is recorded to have been fought at Formaeil of Rathbeg, which O'Donovan identifies with Formil, in the parish of Lower Bodoney, Tyrone; and secondly, at 1051, where mention is made of Slieve-Formoyle, which was the ancient name of Slieve O'Flynn, west of Castlerea, in Roscommon.

The word cor, as a topographical term, has several meanings, the most common being a round hill ; but it is also applied to a round pit or cup-like hollow, to a turn or bend, such as the bend of a road, &c. ; and as an adjective, it means odd, and also round. In consequence of this diversity, it is often difficult to determine its exact sense ; and to add to the complexity, the word corr, a crane, is liable to be confounded with it.

This word is used very extensively in local nomenclature ; and in its various senses, it forms the first syllable of more than 1000 townland names, in the greater number of which it means a round hill. Corbeagh, in Longford and Cavan, is in Irish, Cor-beith-each, the round hill of the birch ; Corkeeran, in Monaghan, of the rowan-trees ; Cornagee and Cornageeha, the hill of the wind ; Cornaveagh, of the ravens. The diminutives, Corrog and Corroge, give names to some places in Down and Tipperary ; and we find Correen in several of the north-western counties ; Correenfeeradda, near Knockainy, in Limerick, is called in Irish, Coirín-feir-fhada, the round hill of the long grass.

Cruit means a hump on the back ; from this it is applied to round humpy-looking hills ; and it is commonly represented by Crott, Crutt, or Crit, which are the names of places in Fermanagh, Longford, Mayo, and Kilkenny. There is an island called Cruit off the coast of Donegal, i. e. humpy-backed island; and two townlands in King's County and Roscommon are called by the same name. The plural Crotta or Crutta, humps, and the English plural Crottees, give names to some places in Kerry, Tipperary, and Cork; and Crottan, little hump, occurs in Fermanagh.

The word is variously combined to form other names; such as Kilcruit, in Carlow, the wood of the hump-backed hill; Loughcrot, near Dromdaleague, in Cork, the lake of the hillocks; Drumacruttan, in Monaghan; and Drumacrittin, in Fermanagh, the ridge of the little hump; Barnagrotty, in King's County, Barr-na-gerotta, the hill-top of the hummocks.

Cnap [knap, c pronounced as in cnoc, p. 348] is a button, a knob, a lump of anything, a knot in timber, &c.; and it is cognate with Ang. Sax. cnaep, Ger. knopf, Eng. knob. In a secondary sense it is applied to small round hillocks, and gives name to a considerable number of places. In anglicised names it takes various forms, such as knap, nap, &c.; and in the northern counties, it becomes crap and crup (see p. 74). The diminutives in óg and án occur oftener than the original; Knoppoge, little knob or hill, is the name of thirteen townlands in Cork, Kerry, and Clare; and in the slightly different form Knappoge, it occurs twice in Longford, and once in Clare.

There are many places in the north and north-western counties, called Knappagh, which represents the Irish cnapach, hilly land—a place full of knobs or hillocks; Nappagh, near Ardagh, in Longford, is the same name, but it has lost the k; and the same thing has happened in Nappan, in Antrim, which is the diminutive Cnapan, a little hillock; in this last place is an old burial ground called Killycrappin (cill-a'-cnapain), (see Reeves, Eccl. Ant., p. 87), which preserves the name in another form. In the following names, the n is changed to r:—Crappagh, in Monaghan and Galway, which is the same name as Knappagh; Crippaun, in Kildare, the same as Nappan, in Antrim; Carrickcroppan, in Armagh, Carraig-cnapain, the rock of the little hillock; and Lisnacroppan, in Down, the fort of the hillock.

Tor signifies a tower, and corresponds to Lat. turris. Although the word properly means an artificial tower, yet in many parts of Ireland, as for instance in Donegal, it is applied to a tall rock resembling a tower, without any reference to an artificial structure. It is pretty common as forming part of names, and its derivatives occur oftener than the original. Toralt, in Fermanagh, signifies the tower of the alt or cliff; Tormore, great tower, is the name of several islands, of one, for instance, off the coast of Donegal; Tornaroy, in Antrim, is the king's tower; and in the parish of Culfeightrin, same county, there are five townlands whose names begin with Tor. In some few cases, especially in the central counties, the syllable tor, may have been corrupted from tuar, a bleach green; but the physical aspect of the place will generally determine which is the correct root.

Tory Island, off the coast of Donegal, is known in ancient writings by two distinct names, Toirinis, and Torach, quite different in meaning, but both derived from tor. This island is mentioned in our bardic histories as the stronghold of the Fomorian pirates (see p. 151), and called in these documents, Toir-inis, the island of the tower; and according to all our traditional accounts, it received this name from Tor-Conaing, or Conaing's tower, a fortress famous in Irish legend, and called after Conaing, a Fomorian chief.

In many other ancient authorities, such as the Life of St. Columkille, "The Wars of GG.," &c., it is called Torach; and the present name, Tory, is derived from this form (see p. 32, supra). The island abounds in lofty isolated rocks, which are called tors or towers; and the name Torach means simply towery—abounding in tors or towers-like rocks. The intelligent Irish-speaking natives of the Donegal coast give it this interpretation; and no one can look at the island from the mainland, without admitting that the name is admirably descriptive of its appearance.

Tortán, a diminutive of tor, forms a part of several modern names, and it is applied to a small knoll or tummock, or a high turf bank. It gives name to Turtane, in Carlow, to Toortane in Queen's County, Waterford, and Kilkenny, and to Tartan, in Roscommon.

Fornocht is a bare, naked, or exposed hill. It gives name to a parish in Kildare, now called Forenaghts, in which the plural form has prevailed, very probably in consequence of the subdivision of the original townland into two parts. There are also several townlands called Fornaght, in Cork and Waterford; and Farnaght, another modern form, is the name of some places in Fermanagh and the Connaught counties.

Cabhán [cavan] means a hollow or cavity, a hollow place, a hollow field; and this is undoubtedly its primary meaning, for it is evidently cognate with Lat. cavea, Fr. caban, Welsh, cabane, and Eng. cabin. Yet in some parts of Ulster it is understood to mean the very reverse, viz., a round dry hill. This curious discrepancy is probably owing to a gradual change of meaning, similar to the change in the words lug, linn, mullan, &c.: which of the two meanings it bears in each particular case, depends of course on the physical conformation of the place. In its topographical application, this word is confined to the northern half of Ireland, and is more frequent in the Ulster counties than elsewhere; its universal anglicised form is cavan.

The town of Cavan is well described by its name, for it stands in a remarkable hollow. There are more than twenty townlands called Cavan, and the word begins the names of about seventy others. In the counties of Tyrone, Donegal, and Armagh, there are several places called Cavanacaw, which represents the Irish Cabhan-a'-cátha, the round hill of the chaff, from the custom of winnowing corn on the top; Cavanalick, near Enniskillen, the hill of the flagstone or stony surface. The word cabhanach is an adjective formation from cabhan, and means a place abounding in round hills; in the modern form Cavanagh it is found in Cavan and Fermanagh; and in Monaghan, the same word occurs under the form Cavany.

Eiscir [esker] means a ridge of high land, but it is generally applied to a sandy ridge, or a line of low sand hills. It enters pretty extensively into local names, but it is more frequently met with across the middle of Ireland than in either the north or south. It usually takes the form of Esker, which by itself is the name of more than thirty townlands, and combines to form the names of many others.

The most celebrated esker in Ireland is Esker-Riada, a line of gravel hills extending with little interruption across Ireland, from Dublin to Clarin-Bridge in Galway, which was fixed upon as the boundary between the north and south halves of Ireland, when the country was divided, in the second century, between Owen More and Con of the Hundred Battles (see p. 124).

As a termination, this word assumes other forms, all derived from the genitive escreach [eskera]. Clash-aniskera, in Tipperary, is called in Irish Clais-an-eiscreach, the trench or pit of the sand-hill; Ahas-cragh, in Galway, signifies the ford of the esker; but its full name as given by the Four Masters is Ath-eascrach-Cuain, the ford of St. Cuan's sand hill; and they still retain the memory of St. Cuan, the patron, who is commemorated in O'Clery's Calendar at the 15th of October. Eskeragh and Eskragh are the names of several townlands in the Ulster and Connaught counties, the Irish Eiscreach signifying a place full of eskers or sand hills.

Tiompan is generally understood, when used topographically, to mean a small abrupt hill; it occurs as a portion of a few townland names, and it does not appear to be confined to any particular part of the country. It is pronounced Timpan in the north, and Timpaun in the south and west, and modernized accordingly, the former being the name of a place in the parish of Layd, Antrim, and the latter of another in Roscommon. The word is slightly varied in Tempanroe (red), in Tyrone; and Timpany, in the same county, is from Tiompanach, a place full of timpans or hillocks. Craigatempin, near Ballymoney, Antrim, is the rock of the hillock; and Curraghna dimpaun, in Kilkenny, the marsh of the little hills.

The word learg [lārg] signifies the side or slope of a hill; it is used in local names, but not so often as learg-aidh [largy], a derivative from it, with the same meaning. Largy, the most usual modernized form, is found only in the northern half of Ireland, and is almost confined to Ulster; it gives name to many townlands, both by itself and in combination. Largysillagh and Largynagreana are the names of two places near Killybegs, in Donegal, the former signifying the hill-side of the willows, and the latter, sunny hill-slope, from its southern aspect. The diminutive Lorgan, meaning still the same thing, is also of very common occurrence as a townland name, both singly and compounded with other words.

Leitir [letter]. According to Peter O'Connell, this word means the side of a hill, a steep ascent or descent, a cliff; and O'Donovan translates it "hill-side," "wet or spewy hill-side," "hill-side with the tricklings of water," &c. In Cormac's Glossary it is thus explained:—"Letir, i. e. tirim a leth, acos flich an leth naile"; "letir, i. e. dry its half, and wet the other half"; from which it appears that Cormac considered it derived from leth-tirim, half-dry. This gives some countenance to O'Donovan's "wet hill side."

This word is often found in ancient authorities, as forming the names of places. At 1584, the Four Masters mention a place called Leitir-Meallain, Mealan's letter or hill side, an island off the Connemara coast, which is still called Lettermullen. Latteragh, in Tipperary, is very often mentioned in the annals and calendars, and always called Letrecha-Odhraín (O'Cler. Cal.), Odhran's wet hill-slopes. St. Odhran [Oran], the patron, who is commemorated in the Calendar at the 26th of November, died, according to the Four Masters, in the year 548.

A considerable number of places derive their names from this word, especially in the western half of Ireland, where it prevails much more than elsewhere; I have not found it at all towards the eastern coast. Its most usual form is Letter, which is by itself the name of about twenty-six townlands, and forms the beginning of about 120 others. Letterbrick, in Donegal and Mayo, is Leitir-bruic, the hill-side of the badger; Letterbrock, of the badgers; Lettershendony, in Derry, the old man's hill-side; Letterkeen, in Fermanagh and Mayo, beautiful letter; Letterlicky, in Cork, the hill side of the flag-stone or flag-surfaced land; Lettergeeragh, in Longford, of the sheep.

Rinn means the point of anything, such as the point of a spear, &c.; in its local application, it denotes a point of land, a promontory, or small peninsula. O'Brien says in his Dictionary:—"It would take up more than a whole sheet to mention all the neck-lands of Ireland, whose names begin with this word Rinn." It is found pretty extensively in names, in the forms Rin, Rinn, Reen, Rine, and Ring; and these constitute or begin about 170 townland names.

Names containing this word are often found in Irish authorities. In the county Roscommon, on the western shore of Lough Ree, is a small peninsula, about a mile in length, now called St. John's, or Randown, containing the ruins of a celebrated castle; there must have been originally a dun on the point, for the ancient name, as given in the annals, is Rinn-duin, the peninsula of the fortress. The ancient name of Island-Magee, a peninsula near Larne, was Rinn-Seimhne [Sevně], from the territory in which it was situated, which was called Seimhne; in the Taxation of 1306 it is called by its old name, in the anglicised form, Ransevyn. It received its present name from its ancient proprietors, the Mac Aedhas or Magees, not one of whose descendants is now living there. (See Reeves, Eccl. Ant. pp. 58, 270.)

In the parish of Kilconry, Clare, is a point of land jutting into the Shannon, called Rineanna, which the Four Masters call Rinn-eanagh, the point of the marsh; there is an island in Lough Ree called Rinanny, and a townland in Mayo, called Rinanagh, both of which are different forms of the same name. Ringcurran is a peninsula forming a modern parish near Kinsale; it is a place very often mentioned in the annals, and its Irish name is Rinn-chorrain, which Philip O'Sullivan Beare correctly translates, cuspis falcis, the point of the reaping hook, so called from its shape. It is curious that the same sickle shape has given the name of Curran to a little peninsula near Larne. On a point of land near Kinsale, are the ruins of Ringrone castle, the old seat of the De Courcys; the name, which properly belongs to the little promontory on which the castle stands, is written in the Annals of Innisfallen, Rinn-roin, the point of the seal.

Ring stands alone as the name of many places in different counties, in all cases meaning a point of land; Ringaskiddy, near Spike Island, in Cork, is Skiddy's point. I think it very probable that the point of land between the mouth of the river Dodder and the sea, gave name to Ringsend, near Dublin, the second syllable being English:—Ringsend, i. e. the end of the Rinn or point.

Ringville, in Waterford, though it looks English, is an Irish name, Rinn-bhile, the point of the ancient tree; this is also the name of two townlands in Cork and Kilkenny; and Ringvilla, in Fermanagh, is still the same. "Ringhaddy is a part of Killinchy parish, in Down, lying in Strangford Lough. It was originally an island; but having been from time immemorial united to the mainland by a causeway, it presents on the map the appearance of an elongated neck of land, running northwards into the Lough. Hence, probably, the name Rinn-fhada, the long point" (Reeves, Eccl. Ant., p. 9). In the same county there is a townland called Ringfad, which is another modification of the same name.

Reen is another form of this word, which is confined to Cork, Kerry, and Limerick, but in these counties it occurs very often, especially on the coasts. Rinn and Rin are more common in the western and north-western counties than elsewhere; as in Rin-rainy island, near Dunglow, in Donegal, the point of the ferns. In Clare the word is pronounced Rine, and anglicised accordingly; Rinecaha, in the parish of Kilkeedy, signifies the point of the chaff or winnowing.

Stuaic [sthoo-ick] is applied to a projecting pinnacle, or out-jutting point of rock. Although the word is often used to designate projecting rocky points, especially on parts of the coast of Donegal, it has not given names to many townlands. Its usual English form is Stook, which is the name of a place in Tipperary; but the two diminutives, Stookan and Stookeen, occur more frequently than the original.

Visitors to the Giant's Causeway will remember the two remarkable lofty rocks called the Stookans—little stooks or rock-pinnacles—standing in the path leading to the Causeway, which afford a very characteristic example of the application of this term. We find Stookeens, the same word in Limerick, and the singular Stookeen occurs in Cork. Near Loughrea, in Galway, is a townland called Cloghastookeen, the stone fortress of the little pinnacle, which received its name from a castle of the Burkes, the ruins of which still remain; Baurstookeen, in Tipperary, the summit of the pinnacle.

The words aill and faill [oil, foil], mean a rock, a cliff, or a precipice; both words are radically the same, the latter being derived from the former by prefixing f (see p. 26). I have already observed that this practice of prefixing f is chiefly found in the south, and accordingly it is only in this part of Ireland that names occur derived from faill.

Faill is generally made foil and foyle in the present names, and there are great numbers of cliffs round the Munster coasts, especially on those of Cork and Kerry, whose names begin with these syllables; they also begin the names of about twenty-five townlands, inland as well as on the coast. Foilycleara, in Limerick and Tipperary, signifies O'Clery's cliff; Foilnaman in the latter county, the cliff of the women. The diminutive is seen in Falleenadatha, in the parish of Doon, Limerick, Faillín-a'-deata, the little cliff of the smoke. When foyle comes in as a termination, it is commonly derived, however, not from faill, but from poll a hole; for instance Ballyfoyle and Ballyfoile, the names of several townlands, represent the Irish Baile-phoill, the town of the hole.

While faill is confined to the south, the other form aill, is found all over Ireland, under a variety of modern forms. Ayle and Aille are the names of a number of places in Munster and Connaught; Ayleacotty, in Clare, is Aill-a'-choite, the cliff of the cot or little boat; Allagower near Tallaght, Dublin, the cliff of the goat. Lisnahall, in Tyrone, signifies the fort of the cliff; and Aghnahily, in Queen's county, the field of the cliff. The diminutive Alleen is found in Tipperary and Galway; in the former county, there are four townlands, two of them called Alleen Hogan, and two, Alleen Ryan, Hogan's and Ryan's little cliff.

Carraig or carraic [carrig, carrick], signifies a rock; it is usually applied to a large natural rock, not lying flat on the surface of the ground like leac, but more or less elevated. There are two other forms of this word, craig and creag, which, though not so common as carraig, are yet found in considerable numbers of names, and are used in Irish documents of authority. Carraig corresponds with Sansc. karkara, a stone; Armoric, karrek, and Welsh, careg or craig, a rock.

Carrick and Carrig are the names of nearly seventy townlands, villages, and towns, and form the beginning of about 550 others; craig and creag are represented by the various forms, Crag, Craig, Creg, &c., and these constitute or begin about 250 names; they mean primarily a rock, but they are sometimes applied to rocky land.

Carrigafoyle, an island in the Shannon, near Ballylongford, Kerry, with the remains of Carrigafoyle castle near the shore, the chief seat of the O'Conors Kerry, is called in the annals, Carraig-an-phoill, the rock of the hole; and it took its name from a deep hole in the river immediately under the castle. Ballynagarrick, in Down, represents the Irish Baile-na-gcarraig, the town of the rocks; Carrigallen, in Leitrim, was so called from the rock on which the original church was built, the Irish name of which was Carraig-áluinn, beautiful rock. In Inishargy, in Down, the initial c has dropped out by aspiration; in the Taxation of 1306 it is called Inyscargi, which well represents Inis-carraige, the island of the rocks; and the rising ground on which the old church stands was formerly, as the name indicates, an island surrounded by marshes, which have been converted into cultivated fields. (See Reeves, Eccl. Ant., p. 19).

The form craig occurs more than once in the Four Masters; for instance they mention a place called Craig-Corcrain, Corcran's rock; and this name in the corrupted form of Cahercorcaun, is still applied to a townland in the parish of Rath, Clare; they also mention Craig-ui-Chiardubhain, O'Kirwan's rock, now Craggykerrivan in the parish of Clondagad, same county. Craigavad on Belfast Lough, was so called, probably, from a rock on the shore to which a boat used to be moored; for its Irish name is Craig-a'-bhaid, the rock of the boat.

The form Carrick is pretty equally distributed over Ireland; Carrig is much more common in the south than elsewhere; Cregg and Creg are found oftener in the north and west than in the south and east; and with three or four exceptions, Craig is confined to Ulster. The diminutive Carrigeen, Carrigane, and Carrigaun, prevail in the southern half of Ireland; and in the northern, Carrigan, Cargan, and Cargin, all signifying little rock or land with a rocky surface; and with their plurals, they give names to numerous townlands and villages. There are also a great many places in the north and north-west, called Creggan, and in the south and west, Creggane and Creggaun, which are diminutives of creag, and are generally applied to rocky land.

Cloch signifies a stone—any stone either large or small, as for instance, cloth-shneachta, a hail-stone, literally snow-stone; cloth-teine, fire-stone, i. e. a flint. So far as it is perpetuated in local names, it was applied in each particular case to a stone sufficiently large and conspicuously placed, to attract general notice, or rendered remarkable by some custom or historical occurrence. The word is also, in an extended sense, often applied to a stone building, such as a castle; for example, the castle of Glin on the Shannon, in Limerick, the seat of the Knight of Glin, is called in Irish documents, Cloch-gleanna, the stone castle of the glen or valley. It is often difficult to determine with certainty which of these two meanings it bears in local names.

Cloch is one of our commonest topographical roots; in the English forms Clogh and Clough, it constitutes or begins more than 400 townland names; and it helps to form innumerable others in various combinations. Cloghbally and Cloghvally, which are common townland names, represent the Irish Cloch-bhaile, stony-town; scattered over Munster, Connaught, and Ulster, are many places called Cloghboley and Cloghboola, stony booley or dairy place; and Cloghvolie, Cloghvoola, and Cloghvoula, are varied forms of the same name.

Sometimes the final guttural drops out, and the word is reduced to clo; as in Clomanta, in Kilkenny, in which no guttural appears, though there are two in the original Cloch-Mantaigh, the stone-castle of Man-tach, a man's name signifying toothless (see p. 100); Clomoney and Clorusk, in Carlow, the former signifying the stone of the shrubbery, and the latter, of the marsh.

Names formed from this word, variously combined, are found in every part of Ireland: when it comes in as a termination, it is usually in the genitive (cloiche, pron. clohy), and in this case it takes several modern forms, which will be illustrated in the following names. Ballyclogh, Ballyclohy, Ballinaclogh, Ballynaclogh, and Ballynacloghy, all names of frequent occurrence, mean stone town, or the town of the stones. Aughnacloy is a little town in Tyrone; and there are several townlands in other counties of the same name, all called in Irish Achadh-na-cloiche, the field of the stone.

There are three diminutives of this word in common use—cloichín, clochóg, and eloghán—of which the third has been already dealt with (p. 334). The first is generally anglicised Clogheen or Cloheen, which is the name of a town in Tipperary, and of several townlands in Cork, Waterford, and Kildare. Cloghoge, or Clohoge, though literally meaning a small stone, like Clogheen, is generally applied to stony land, or to a place full of round stones; it is the name of about twenty townlands, chiefly in Ulster—a few, however, being found in Sligo, and in the Leinster counties.

There are several derivative forms from this word clock. The most common is clochar, which is generally applied to stony land—a place abounding in stones, or having a stony surface; but it occasionally means a rock. Its most usual anglicised form is Clogher, which is the name of a well-known town in Tyrone, of a village and a remarkable headland in Louth, and of nearly sixty townlands scattered over Ireland; and, compounded with various words, it helps to form the names of numerous other places.

For Clogher in Tyrone, however, a different origin has been assigned. It is stated that there existed anciently at this place a stone covered with gold, which was worshipped as Kermann Kelstach, the principal idol of the northern Irish; and this stone, it is said, was preserved in the church of Clogher down to a late period: hence the place was called Cloch-oir, golden stone. O'Flaherty makes this statement in his Ogygia, on the authority of Cathal Maguire, archdeacon of Clogher, the compiler of the Annals of Ulster, who died in 1495; and Harris, in his edition of Ware's Bishops, notices the idol in the following words:—"Clogher, situated on the river Lanny, takes its name from a Golden Stone, from which, in the Times of Paganism, the Devil used to pronounce juggling Answers, like the Oracles of Apollo Pythius, as is said in the Register of Clogher."

With this story of the idol I have nothing to do; but that the name of Clogher is derived from it—i. e. from Cloch-oir—I do not believe, and for these reasons. The prevalence of the name Clogher in different parts of Ireland, with the same general meaning, "is rather damaging to such an etymon," as Dr. Reeves remarks, and affords strong presumption that this Clogher is the same as all the rest. The most ancient form of the name, as found in Adamnan, is Clochur Filiorum Daimeni (this being Adamnan's translation of the proper Irish name, Clochur-mac-Daimhin, Clochur of the sons of Daimhin); in which the final syllable ur shows no trace of the genitive of óir, gold (óir, gen. óir); and, besides, the manner in which Clochur is connected with mac-Daimhin goes far to show that it is a generic term, the construction being exactly analogous to Inis-mac-Nessan (p. 101). These considerations appear to me to show that the name of this place is not derived from Cloch-oir, but that it is, like all the other Cloghers, a modern form of Clochar.

This place retains its ancient name in the latest Irish authorities. Daimhin, whose sons are commemorated in the name, was eighth in descent from Colla-Da-Chrich (p. 127), and consequently must have lived about the end of the sixth century. His descendants were in later times called Clann-Daimhin; and they were represented, so late as the fourteenth century, by the family of Dwyer.

Cloghereen, little stony place, a diminutive of clogher, is well known to tourists as the name of a village near Killarney. Cloichreán, or cloithreán [cloherawn], another diminutive, signifies also a stony place, and is found in every part of Ireland in different modern forms. It is Clogherane in Kerry and Waterford; and in the county of Dublin it gives name to two parishes called Cloghran. In many cases the guttural has dropped out, reducing it to Cloran, in Westmeath, Tipperary, and Galway; Clorane and Clorhane, in Limerick, King's, and Queen's county. It undergoes various other alterations—as, for instance, Clerran, in Monaghan; Cleighran, in Leitrim; Cleraun, in Longford; and Clerhaun, in Mayo and Galway.

Clochar has other developments, one of which, clocharach or cloithreach, meaning much the same as clochar itself—a stony place—is found pretty widely spread in various modern forms; such as Cloghera, in Clare and Kerry; and Clerragh, in Roscommon. Another offshoot is cloichearnach, with still the same meaning; this is anglicised Cloghernagh, in Donegal and Monaghan; Clahernagh, in Fermanagh; Clohernagh, in Wicklow and Tipperary; while in Tyrone it gives the name of Clogherny to a parish and four townlands.

The word leac, lic, or liag [lack, lick, leeg]—for it is written all three ways—means primarily a great stone, but it is commonly applied to a flag or large flat stone; thus the Irish for ice is leac-oidhre [lack-īra], literally snow-flag. The most ancient form is liac or liacc, which is used to translate lapis in the Wb. and Sg. MSS., of Zeuss; and it is cognate with the Welsh llech; Latin, lapis; and Greek, lithos.

This word occurs very often in Irish names, and in its local application it is very generally used to denote a flat-surfaced rock, or a place having a level rocky surface. Its most common forms are Lack, Leck and Lick, which are the names of many town-lands and villages through Ireland, as well as the diminutives Lackeen, and Lickeen, little rock. The form liag is represented by Leeg and Leek, in Monaghan, and by Leeke, in Antrim and Londonderry.

Lickmolassy, a parish in Galway—St. Molaise's flag-stone—was so called, because the hill on which the church was built, that gave name to the parish, is covered on the surface with level flag-like rocks. Legvoy, a place in Roscommon, west of Carrick-on-Shannon, is called by the Four Masters, Leagmhagh, the flag-surfaced plain. The celebrated mountain Slieve League, in Donegal, is correctly described by its name:—"A quarry lately opened here, shows this part of the mountain to be formed of piles of thin small flags of a beautiful white colour And here observe how much there is in a name; for Slieve League (or Liaga) means the mountain of flags."*

I have already observed (p. 326) that stony fords are very often designated by names indicating their character; and I will give a few additional illustrations here. Belleek, in Fermanagh, on the Erne, east of Ballyshannon, is called in Irish authorities, B  l-leic  , "translated os rupis by Philip O'Sullivan Beare in his History of the Irish Catholics. The name signifies ford-mouth of the flag-stone, and the place was so called from the flat-surfaced rock in the ford, which, when the water decreases in summer, appears as level as a marble floor (O'Donovan, Four Mast. V., p. 1354). Belleek is also the name of a place near Ballina, in Mayo, which was so called from a rocky ford on the

* "The Donegal Highlands," a late publication, in which this wonderful region is faithfully described.

Moy; there is a village of the same name near Newtown Hamilton, Armagh, and also two townlands in Galway and Meath. Ballinalack is the name of a village in Westmeath, a name originally applied to a ford on the river Inny, over which there is now a bridge; the correct name is Bel-atha-na-leac [Bella-nalack], the mouth of the ford of the flag-stones, a name that most truly describes the place, which is covered with limestone flags. In some other cases, however, Ballinalack is derived from Baile-na-leac, the town of the flag-stones.

Several derivative forms from leac are perpetuated in local names; one of these, leacach, signifying stony, is applied topographically to a place full of stones or flags, and has given the name of Lackagh to many places in different parts of Ireland. Several places of this name are mentioned in the annals; for instance, Lackagh in the parish of Inishkeel, Donegal, and the river Lackagh, falling into Sheephaven, same county, both of which are noticed in the Four Masters.

Leacán is one of the most widely extended of all derivatives from leac, and in every part of the country it is applied to a hill side. In the modern forms of Lackan, Lacken, Lackaun, Leckan, Leckaun, and Lickane, it gives name to more than forty townlands, and its compounds are still more numerous. Lackan, in the parish of Killglass, in Sligo, was formerly the residence of the Mac Firbises, where their castle, now called Castle Forbes (i. e. Firbis), still remains; and here they compiled many Irish works, among others, the well-known Book of Lecan.

“Boireann [burren], a large rock; a stony, rocky district. It is the name of several rocky districts in the north and south of Ireland” (O’Donovan, App. to O’Reilly’s Dict. in voce). According to an ancient MS.

quoted by O'Donovan, it is derived from borr, great, and onn, a stone.

A considerable number of local names are derived from this word; one of the best known is Burren, in Clare, an ancient territory, very often mentioned in the annals, which is as remarkable for its stony character, as it is celebrated for its oyster bank. Burren is the name of eleven townlands, some of which are found in each of the provinces; there is a river joining the Barrow at the town of Carlow, called Burren, i. e. rocky river; and in Dublin, the word appears in the name of the Burren rocks near the western shore of Lambay island.

There are many places whose names are partly formed from this word:—Burrenrea, in Cavan, and Burrenreagh, in Down, both mean grey burren. Cloonburren on the west bank of the Shannon, nearly opposite Clonmacnoise, is frequently mentioned in the annals, its Irish name being Cluain-boireann, rocky meadow. Rathborne, a parish in Clare, received its name—Rath-Boirne, the fort of Burren—from the district in which it is situated. The plural, boirne [burny], is modernized into Burnew, i. e. rocky lands, in the parish of Killinkere, Cavan; and near Aghada, in Cork, is a place called Knockanemorney, in Irish Cnocan-na-mboirne, the little hill of the rocks.

The word carr, though not found in the dictionaries, is understood in several parts of Ireland to mean a rock, and sometimes rocky land. It is probable that carraig, a rock, carn, a monumental heap of stones, and cairthe, a pillar-stone, are all etymologically connected with this word.

Carr is the name of three townlands in Down, Fermanagh, and Tyrone; and it forms part of several names; such as Carcullion, in the parish of Clonduff, Down, the rock or rocky land of the holly; Gortahar, in Antrim, Gort-a'-chairr, the field of the rock. In the parish of Clonallan, Down, is a place called Carrogs, little rocks. There is another diminutive, common in the west of Ireland, namely, cairthín, which is anglicised as it is pronounced, Carheen; it generally means rocky land, but in some places it is understood to mean a cahereen, that is, a little caher or stone fort, and occasionally a little cairthe, or pillar-stone; the English plural Carheens, and the Irish Carheeny, both meaning little rocks or little stone forts, are the names of several places in Galway, Mayo, and Limerick.

The third diminutive, carran, is more generally used than either of the two former, and it has several anglicised forms, such as Caran, Caraun, Carran, and Carraun. It is often difficult to fix the meaning of these words; they generally signify rocky land, but they are occasionally understood to mean a reaping hook, applied in this sense, from some peculiarity of shape; and Caran and Carran are sometimes varied forms of carn. Craan, Craane, and Crane, which are the names of a number of places, are modifications which are less doubtful in meaning; they are almost confined to Carlow and Wexford, and are always applied to rocky land—land showing a rocky surface.

Sceir [sker] means, according to the dictionaries, a sharp sea rock; sceire [skerry], sea rocks. It is applied to rocks inland, however, as well as to those in the sea, as is proved by the fact, that there are several places far removed from the coast whose names contain the word. It enters pretty extensively into local nomenclature, and its most usual forms are either the singular Skerry, or the plural Skerries, which are the names of several well-known places.

Sceilig [skellig], according to O'Reilly, means a rock; the form scillec occurs in Cormac's Glossary in the sense of a splinter of stone; and O'Donovan, in the Four Masters, translates Sceillic, sea rock. There are, however, as in the case of sceir, some places inland whose names are derived from it.

The most remarkable places bearing the name of Sceilig are the great and little Skelligs, two lofty rocks off the coast of Kerry. Great Skellig was selected, in the early ages of Christianity, as a religious retreat, and the ruins of some of the primitive cells and oratories remain there to this day; the place was dedicated to the Archangel Michael, and hence it is called in Irish authorities, Sceillig Mhichil, Michael's skellig or sea rock. From these rocks the bay of Ballinaskelligs, on the coast of Iveragh, took its name.

One of the little ruined churches in Glendalough, which is situated under the crags of Lugduff mountain, is called Templenaskellig, the church of the rock, and this skellig or rock is often mentioned in the old Lives of St. Kevin. Bunskellig, the foot of the rock, is a place near Eyeries, on Kenmare bay; and in Tyrone there are two townlands called Skelgagh, an adjective formation from sceilig, signifying rocky land.

Speilic is used in Louth in the sense of a splintery rock, but it is very probably a corruption of sceilig; it has given name to Spellickanee, in the parish of Ballymacscanlan, which is in Irish, Speilic-an-fhiaich, the rock of the raven. Among the Mourne Mountains it is pronounced spellig; and the adjective form speilgeach [spelligagh], is understood there to denote a place full of pointed rocks.

Spinc [spink] is used in several parts of Ireland to denote a point of rock, or a sharp overhanging cliff, but it is employed more generally on the coast of Donegal than elsewhere. It has not given names to many places, however, even in Donegal, where it is most used. There is a townland in King's County, called Spink; and near Tallaght, in Dublin, rises a small hill called Spinkan, little spink or pinnacle.

There are other terms for hills, such as druim, eudan, ceann, &c., but these will be treated of in another chapter.

CHAPTER II.

PLAINS, VALLEYS, HOLLOWS, AND CAVES.

Magh [maw or moy] is the most common Irish word for a plain or level tract. It is generally translated campus by Latin writers, and it is rendered planities in the Annals of Tighernach. It is a word of great antiquity, and in the Latinized form magus—which corresponds with the old Irish orthography mag—it is frequently used in ancient Gaulish names, such as Cæsaromagus, Drusomagus, Noviomagus, Rigomagus, &c. (Gram. Celt., p. 9). It occurs also in the Zeuss MSS., where it is given as the equivalent of campus. The word appears under various forms in anglicised names, such as magh, moy, ma, mo, &c.

Many of the great plains celebrated in former ages, and constantly mentioned in Irish authorities, have lost their names, though the positions of most of them are known. Magh-breagh [Moy-brā], the great plain extending from the Liffey northwards towards the borders of the present county of Louth, may be mentioned as an example. The word breagh signifies fine or beautiful, and it is still preserved both in sound and sense in the Scotch word braw; Magh-breagh is accordingly translated, in the Annals of Tighernach, Planities amæna, the delightful plain, and our "rude forefathers" never left us a name more truly characteristic. In its application to the plain, however, it has been forgotten for generations, though it is still preserved in the name of Slieve Bregh, a hill between Slane and Collon, signifying the hill of Magh-breagh.

Many of the celebrated old plains still either partly or wholly retain their original names, and of these I will mention a few. Macosquin, now a parish in Londonderry, is called in the annals, Magh-Cosgrain, the plain of Cosgran, a man's name, very common both in ancient and modern times. There is a village called Movilla, near Newtownards, in Down, where a great monastery was founded by St. Finnian in the sixth century; its Irish name is Magh-bilē (O'Cler. Cal.), the plain of the ancient tree; and there is another place with the same Irish name, in the east of Inishowen, in Donegal, now called Moville, which was also a religious establishment, though not equally ancient or important.

Mallow, in Cork, is called in Irish, Magh-Ealla [Moyalla: Four Mast.], the plain of the river Ealla or Allo. The stream now called the Allo is a small river flowing into the Blackwater through Kanturk, ten or eleven miles from Mallow; but the Blackwater itself, for at least a part of its course, was anciently called Allo;* from this the district between Mallow and Kanturk was called Magh-Ealla, which ultimately settled down as the name of the town of Mallow. The river also gave name to the territory lying on its north bank, west of Kanturk, which is called in Irish authorities, Duthaigh-Ealla [Doohy-alla], i. e. the district of the Allo, now shortened to Duhallow.

* See a Paper "On Spenser's Irish Rivers," by the author, Proc. R. I. A., Vol. X., p. 1.

Magunihy, now a barony in Kerry, is called by the Four Masters, in some places, Magh-gCoincinne [Magunkinny], and in others, Magh-O-gCoinchinn, i. e. the plain of the O'Coincinnns; from the former of which the present name is derived. The territory, however, belonged 250 years ago to the O'Donohoes, and, according to O'Heeren, at an earlier period to the O'Connells: of the family of O'Conkin, who gave name to the territory, I have found no further record.

The form Moy is the most common of any. It is itself, as well as the plural Moys (i. e. plains), the name of several places, and forms part of a large number. Moynalty, in Meath, represents the Irish Magh-nealta, the plain of the flocks; this was also the ancient name of the level country lying between Dublin and Howth (see p. 150); and the bardic annals state, that it was the only plain in Ireland not covered with wood, on the arrival of the first colonies. The district between the rivers Erne and Drowes, is now always called The Moy, which partly preserves a name of great antiquity. It is the celebrated plain of Magh-gCedne [genně], so frequently mentioned in the accounts of the earliest colonists; and it was here the Fomorian pirates of Tory (p. 151), exacted their oppressive yearly tribute from the Nemedians.

This word assumes other forms in several counties, such as Maw, Maws, Moigh, and Muff. In accordance with the Munster custom of restoring the final g (p. 30), it is modified to Moig in the name of some places near Askeaton, and elsewhere in Limerick; and this form, a little shortened, appears in Mogeely, a well known place in Cork, which the Four Masters call Magh-Ilċ, the plain of Ilċ or Eilċ, a man's name.

There is one diminutive, maighin [moyne], which is very common, both in ancient and modern names; it occurs in Zeuss, in the form magen; and we find it in the Four Masters, when they record the erection, in 1460, by Mac William Burke, of the celebrated abbey of Maighin, or Moyne, in Mayo. The ruins of this abbey still remain near the river Moy, in the parish of Killala, County Mayo. This, as well as the village of Moyne, in Tipperary, and about a dozen places of the same name in the three southern provinces, were all so called from a maighin or little plain. Maine and Mayne, which are the names of several places from Derry to Cork, are referable to the same root, though a few of them may be from meadhon, middle.

Machaire [maghera], a derivative from magh, and meaning the same thing, is very extensively used in local nomenclature. It generally appears in the anglicised forms of Maghera and Maghery, which are the names of several villages and townlands; Maghera is the more usual form, and it begins the names of nearly 200 places, which are found in each of the four provinces, but are more common in Ulster than elsewhere. The parish of Magheradrool, in Down, is called in the Reg. Prene, Machary-edargawal, which represents the Irish, Machaire-eadarghabhal [Maghera-ad-derool], the plain between the (river) forks. (Reeves, Eccl. Ant., pp. 106, 316).

Reidh [ray] signifies a plain, a level field; it is more commonly employed in the south of Ireland than elsewhere, and it is usually applied to a mountain flat, or a coarse, moory, level piece of land among hills. Its most general anglicised forms are rea, re, and rey.

In the parish of Ringogonagh, Waterford, there is a townland called Readoty, which is modernized from Reidh-doighte, burnt mountain plain; Reanagishagh, in Clare, the mountain flat of the kishes or wicker causeways; Remeen, in Kilkenny, smooth plain; Ballynarea, near Newtown Hamilton, Armagh, the town of the mountain flat. The plural, Rehy, i. e. mountain flats, is the name of a place in Clare. Reidhleach, a derivative from reidh, and meaning the same thing, gives names to some places in Tyrone, Fermanagh, and Cavan, in the modernized form, Relagh.

Reidh is also used as an adjective, signifying ready or prepared; and from this, by an easy transition, it has come to signify clear, plain, or smooth; it is probable indeed that the word was primarily an adjective, and that its use as a noun to designate a plain is merely a secondary application. There is a well-known mountain over the Killeries in Connemara, called Muilrea; and this name characterizes its outline, compared with that of the surrounding hills, when seen from a moderate distance:—Mael-reidh, smooth flat mountain. Rehill is the name of some places in Kerry and Tipperary, which are called in Irish, Rédh-choill, smooth or clear wood, probably indicating that the woods to which the name was originally applied were less dense or tangled, or more easy to pass through, than others in the same neighbourhood.

Clar is literally a board, and occurs in this sense in the Zeuss MSS. in the old form claar, which glosses tabula. It is applied locally to a flat piece of land; and in this sense it gives name to a considerable number of places. Ballyclare is the name of a town in Antrim, and of half a dozen townlands in Roscommon and the Leinster counties; and Ballinclare is also often met with in Leinster and Munster; both names signify the town of the plain. There is a place in Galway, which was formerly called by this name, where a great abbey was founded in the thirteenth century, and a castle in the sixteenth, both of which are still to be seen in ruins; the place is mentioned by the Four Masters, who call it Baile-an-chlair, but it retains only a part of this old name, being now called Clare-Galway.

Clare is by itself the name of many places, some of which are found in each of the four provinces. The county of Clare was so called from the village of the same name; and the tradition of the people is, that it was called Clare from a board formerly placed across the river Fergus to serve as a bridge. Very often the Irish form clar is preserved unchanged: as in Clarcarricknagun, near Donegal, the plain of the rock of the hounds; Clarbane, in Armagh, white plain; Clarderry, in Monaghan, level oak wood. Clarkill, in Armagh, Down, and Tipperary, and Clarehill, in Derry, are not much changed from the original, clar-choill, level wood. In the three last names clar is used as an adjective.

The form Claragh, signifying the same as clar itself—a level place—is much used as a townland name; Claraghatlea, in the parish of Drishane, in Cork, the plain of (i.e. near) the mountain. Sometimes this is smoothed down to Clara, which is the name of a village in King's County, and of several other places; Clarashinnagh, near Mohill, in Leitrim, the plain of the foxes. And lastly, there are several places called Clareen, little plain.

The word gleann [gloun in the south, glan elsewhere], has exactly the same signification as the English word glen. Though they are nearly identical in form, it does not appear that one has been derived from the other, for the English word exists in the Ang.-Saxon, and on the other hand, gleann is used in MSS. much older than the Anglo-Norman invasion.

The word Glen forms or begins the names of more than 600 places, all of them, with an occasional exception, purely Irish; and they are sprinkled through every county in Ireland. The most important of these are explained in other parts of this book, and a very few illustrations will be sufficient here. Glennamaddy, the name of a village in Galway, is called in Irish, Gleann-na-madaighe, the valley of the dogs; Glennagross, near Limerick, of the crosses; Glenmullion, near the town of Antrim, the glen of the mill; Glendine and Glandine, the name of several places in the Munster and Leinster counties, Gleann-doimhin, deep glen; and the same name, in the form of Glendowan, is now applied to a fine range of mountains in Donegal, which must have been so called from one of the "deep valleys" they enclose.

In the south the word is often made glan, and this syllable begins about 120 names, all, with very few exceptions, in Munster. Glanmire, the name of a beautiful valley near Cork, represents exactly the sound of the Irish Gleann-maghair (Four Masters). The word maghar is interpreted by Teige O'Rody to mean a little fish, and John O'Mulconry uses it in this sense (O'Donovan, App. to O'Reilly's Dict. voce magar); Glanmire, therefore, signifies the valley of the little fishes.

Sometimes it is made Glin, of which one of the best known examples is Glin on the Shannon, in Limerick, from which a branch of the Fitzgeralds derives the title of the Knight of Glin. The full name of the place, as given by the Four Masters, is Gleann-Corbraighe [Corbry], Corbrach's or Corbry's Valley. And occasionally we find it Glyn or Glynn, of which we have a characteristic example in the village and parish of Glynn, in Antrim.

There are two diminutives in common use; the one, gleannán, is found in the northern counties in the form of Glennan, while in Galway it is made Glennaun. The other, gleantán, is very much used in the south and west, and gives names to several places now called Glantane, Glantaun, Glentane, and Glentaun—all from a “little glen.”

The plural of gleann is gleanntaidhe [glenty], which, with the English plural superadded to the Irish (p. 30), gives name to the village of Glenties, in Donegal; and it is so called from two fine glens at the head of which it stands, viz. the glen of Stracashel (the river holm of the stone fort), and Glenfada-na-sealga, or the long valley of the hunting.

When this word occurs in the end of names, the g is sometimes aspirated, in which case it disappears altogether both in writing and pronunciation. Old-Leighlin, in Carlow, a place once very much celebrated as an ecclesiastical establishment, is called in the annals, Leith-ghlionn, half glen, a name derived from some peculiarity of configuration in the little river bed. Crumlin is the name of a village near Dublin, and of another in Antrim; there are also eighteen townlands of this name in different counties through the four provinces, besides Crimlin, in Fermanagh, and Cromlin, in Leitrim. In every one of these places there is a winding glen, and in the Antrim Crumlin, the glen is traversed by a river, whose name corresponds with that of the glen, viz. Camline, which literally signifies crooked line. The Four Masters, in mentioning Crumlin, near Dublin, give the true Irish form of the names of all those places, Cruim-ghlinn, curved glen, the sound of which is exactly conveyed by Crumlin. Sometimes in pronouncing this compound, a short vowel sound is inserted between the two root words, which preserves the g from aspiration; and in this manner was formed Cromaglan, the name of the semicircularly curved glen traversed by the Crinnagh river, which falls into the upper lake of Killarney. From this, the fine hill rising immediately over the stream, and overlooking the upper lake, borrowed the name of Cromaglan; and it is now hardly necessary to add that this name does not mean "drooping mountain," as the guide books absurdly translate it. There is a townland of the same name in the parish of Tullylease in Cork, now called Cromagloun.

Lug or lag signifies a hollow; when used topographically, it is almost always applied to a hollow in a hill; and lag, lig, and lug are its most common forms, the first two being more usual in Ulster, and the last in Leinster and Connaught. The word is not so much used in Munster as in the other provinces.

There is a place near Strabane, called Lagnagalloglagh, the hollow of the galloglasses or heavy armed soldiers; Lagnaviddoge, in Mayo, signifies the hollow of the plovers. Leg begins the names of about 100 townlands, almost all of them in the northern half of Ireland. The places called Legacurry, Legachory, and Lagacurry, of which there are about a dozen, are all so called from a caldron-like pit or hollow, the name being in Irish, Lag-a'-choire, the hollow of the caldron.

As this word was applied to a hollow in a mountain, it occasionally happened that the name of the hollow was extended to the mountain itself; as in case of Lugduff over Glendalough, in Wicklow, black hollow; and Lugnaquilla, the highest of the Wicklow mountains, which the few old people who still speak Irish in that district, call Lug-na-gcoilleach, the hollow of the cocks, i. e. grouse.

The diminutives Lagan and Legan occur very often as townland names, but it is sometimes difficult to separate the latter from liagan, a pillar stone. The river Lagan, or Logan, as it is called in the map of escheated estates, 1609, may have taken its name from a "little hollow" on some part of its course; there is a lake in Roscommon, called Lough Lagan, the lake of the little hollow.

Cúm [coom] a hollow; a nook, glen, or dell in a mountain; a valley enclosed, except on one side, by mountains; corresponding accurately with the Welsh cum, and English comb. The Coombe, in Dublin, is a good illustration, being, as the name implies, a hollow place.

This word is used very often in the neighbourhood of Killarney to designate the deep glens of the surrounding mountains; as in case of Coomnagoppul, under Mangerton, whose name originated in the practice of sending horses to graze in it at certain seasons—Cum-na-gcapall, the glen of the horses; and there is another place of the same name in Waterford.

The most usual forms are coom and coun, which form part of many names in the Munster counties, especially in Cork and Kerry: thus Coomacheo, in Cork, the valley of the fog; Coomnahorna, in Kerry, the valley of the barley; Coomnagun, near Killaloe, of the hounds. Lackenacoombe, in Tipperary—the hill side of the hollow—exhibits the word as a termination. Commaun, Commeen, and Cummeen, little hollow, are also often met with; but, as the two latter are sometimes used to express a "common," the investigator must be careful not to pronounce too decidedly on their meaning, without obtaining some knowledge of the particular place.

Bearn or bearna [barn, barna], a gap; it is usually applied to a gap in a mountain or through high land; and in this sense it is very generally applied in local nomenclature, commonly in the form of Barna, which is the name of about a dozen townlands, and enters into the formation of a very large number. Barnageehy and Barnanageehy, the gap of the wind, is a name very often given to high and bleak passes between hills; and the mountain rising over Ballyorgan, in Limerick, is called Barnageeha, from a pass of this kind on its western side. Very often it is translated Windy-gap: there is, for instance, a remarkable gap with this name in the parish of Addergoole, Mayo, which the Four Masters call by its proper Irish name, Bearna-na-gaeithe.

This word takes other forms, especially in the northern counties, where it is pretty common; it is made barnet in several cases, as in Drumbarnet, the ridge of the gap, the name of some places in Donegal and Monaghan; Lisbarnet, in Down, the fort of the gap. There is another Irish form used in the north—namely, bearnas; it has the authority of the annals, in which this term is always used to designate the great gap of Barnismore, near Donegal; and in the forms Barnes and Barnish, it gives names to several places in Antrim, Donegal, and Tyrone. All the preceding modifications are liable to have the b changed to v by aspiration (p. 19), as in Ardvarness, in Derry, and Ardvarney and Ardvarna, in several other counties, high gap; Ballyvarnet, near Bangor, in Down, the town of the gap.

The diminutive Bearnán is the real name of the remarkable gap in the mountain now called the De-vil's bit, in Tipperary, whose contour is so familiar to travellers on the Great Southern and Western Railway; and it gives name to the parish of Barnane-Ely, i. e. the little gap of Eile, the ancient territory in which it was situated.

A scealp [scalp] is a cleft or chasm; the word is much in use among the English-speaking peasantry of the south, who call a piece of anything cut off by a knife or hatchet, a skelp. The well-known mountain chasm called the Scalp, south of Dublin, near Enniskerry, affords the best known and the most characteristic application of the term; and there are other places of the same name in the counties of Clare, Galway, Dublin, and Wicklow. Scalpnagown, in Clare, is the cleft of the calves; Moneyscalp, in Down, the shrubbery of the chasm.

Poll, a hole of any kind; topographically it is applied to holes, pits, or caverns in the earth, deep small pools of water, very deep spots in rivers or lakes, &c.; in the beginning of anglicised names it is always made poll, poul, or pull; and as a termination it is commonly changed to foyle by the aspiration of the p (p. 20), and by the genitive inflexion.

There is a place near Arklow, in Wicklow, called Pollahoney, or in Irish, Poll-a'-chonaidh, the hole of the fire-wood; Pollnaranny, in Donegal, Pollrane, in Wexford, and Pollranny, in Roscommon and Mayo, all signify the hole of the ferns; Polldorragha, near Tuam, dark hole; Pollaginnive, in Fermanagh, sand-pit; Polfore, near Dromore, Tyrone, cold hole. So also Pooldine, in Tipperary, deep hole; Poulaculleare, near Whitechurch, same county, and Pollacul-laie, in Galway, the quarry hole.

The diminutive in various forms is also pretty general. The Pullens (little caverns), near Donegal, “is a deep ravine through which a mountain torrent leaps joyously, then suddenly plunges through a cleft in the rock of from thirty to forty feet in depth,” and after about half a mile “it loses itself again in a dark chasm some sixty feet deep, from which it emerges under a natural bridge.” (The Donegal Highlands, p. 68). There are some very fine sea caves a little west of Castletown Bearhaven, in Cork, which, as well as the little harbour, are well known by the name of Pulleen, little hole or cavern; and this is the name of some other places in Cork and Kerry. We have Pullans near Coleraine, in Derry,* and in the parish of Clontibret, Monaghan; Pollans in Donegal; and Polleens and Polleeny, in Galway, all signifying little holes or caverns. The adjective form pollach is applied to land full of pits or holes, and it has given name to about thirty-five townlands in the three southern provinces, in the forms Pollagh and Pul-lagh.

We have several words in Irish for a cave. Sometimes, as we have seen, the term poll was used, and the combination poll-talmhan (hole of the earth) was occasionally employed in a distinctive term for a cavern, giving name, in this sense, to Poltalloon, in Galway, and to Poultalloon, near Fedamore, in Lime-rick.

Dearc or derc [derk] signifies a cave or grotto, and also the eye; it is probable that the latter is the primary meaning, and that its application to a cave was figurative and secondary. The word is often found in the old MSS.; as, for instance, in case of Derc-ferna (cave of alders), which was the ancient name of the cave of Dunmore, near Kilkenny; and it is still so called in Irish. In the parish of Rathkenny, in Meath, is a place called Dunderk, the fortress of the cave; so named, probably, from an artificial cave in connexion with the dun; there are several places called Derk and Dirk, both meaning simply a cave; and Aghadark, in Leitrim, is the field of the cavern.

Cuas is another term for a cave, which has also given names to a considerable number of places: Coos and Coose are the names of some townlands in Down, Monaghan, and Galway; there is a remarkable cavern near Cong called Cooslughoga, the cave of mice; and it is very likely that Cozies, in the parish of Billy, Antrim, is merely the English plural of cuas, meaning "caves." Clooncoose, Clooncoose, Clooncous, Cloncoose, and Cloncouse, are the names of fourteen townlands spread over the four provinces; the Irish form is Cluain-cuas (Four Masters), the meadow of the caves. Sometimes the c is changed to h by aspiration, as in Corrahoash, in Cavan, the round hill of the cave; and there are several places called Coosan, Coosane, Coosaun, and Coosheen, all signifying little cave. Round the coasts of Cork and Kerry, and perhaps in other counties, cuas or coos is applied to a small sea inlet or cove, and in these places the word must be interpreted accordingly.

There is yet another word for a cave, in very general use, which I find spelled in good authorities in three different ways, uagh, uaimh, and uath [ooa]; for all these are very probably nothing more than modifications of the same original. There is a class of romantic tales in Irish "respecting various occurrences in caves; sometimes the taking of a cave, when the place has been used as a place of refuge or habitation; sometimes the narrative of some adventure in a cave; sometimes of a plunder of a cave; and so on." (O'Curry, Lect., p. 283). A tale of this kind was called uath, i. e. cave.

The second form uaimh is the one in most general use, and its genitive is either uamha or uamhain [ooa, ooan], both of which we find in the annals. Cloyne, in Cork, has retained only a part of its ancient name, Cluain-uamha, as it is written in the Book of Leinster, and many other authorities, i. e. the meadow of the cave; this was the old pagan name, which St. Colman Mac Lenin adopted, when he founded his monastery there in the beginning of the seventh century; and the cave from which the place was named so many hundred years ago, is still to be seen there. At A. M. 3501, the Four Masters record the erection by Emhear, of Rath-uamhain, i. e. the fort of the cave (O'Donovan's Four Masters, I., 27), which exhibits the second form.

Both of these genitives are represented in our present names. The first very often forms the termination oe or oo, or with the article, nahoe, or nahoo; as Drumnahoe, in Antrim and Tyrone, and Drumahoe, in Derry, i. e. Druim-na-huamha, the ridge of the cave; Farnahoe, near Inishannon, in Cork; Glennoo, near Clogher, in Tyrone; and Glennahoo, in Kerry, the land and the glen of the cave. And occasionally the v sound of the aspirated m comes clearly out, forming the termination nahoova, as in Cornahoova, in Meath, the round hill of the cave.

The other genitive, uamhain [ooan], is also very often used, and generally appears in the end of names in the form of one or oon, or with the article, nahone or nahoon; in this manner we have Mullinahone, in Tipperary, Muilenn-na-huamhain, the mill of the cave, from a cave near the village through which the little river runs; Knockeennahone, in Kerry (little hill); and Lisnahoon, in Roscommon, so called, no doubt, from the artificial cave in the lis or fort.

Occasionally we find this last genitive form used as a nominative (p. 31), for, according to O'Donovan (App. to O'Reilly's Dict.), "Uamhainn is used in Thomond to express a natural or artificial cave." The Irish name of Owenbristly, near Ardahan, in Galway, is Uamhainn-brisde, broken cave. Uamhainn, with the mh sounded, would be pronounced oovan; and this by a slight change, effected under the corrupting influence noticed at page 36, has given name to "The Ovens," a small village on the river Bride, two miles west of Ballincollig, in Cork. For, in this place "is a most remarkable cave, large and long, with many branches crossing each other" (Smith's Cork, I., 212), which the people say runs as far as Gill Abbey, near Cork; and by an ingenious alteration, they have converted their fine caves or oovans into ovens! The ford at the village was anciently called Ath-an-uamhain, the ford of the cave, and this, with the v sound suppressed, has given the name of Athnowen to the parish.

CHAPTER III.

ISLANDS, PENINSULAS, AND STRANDS.

THE most common word for an island is inis, cognate with Welsh ynys, Arm. enes, and Lat. insula. It is also applied in all parts of Ireland to the holm, or low flat meadow along a river; and a meadow of this kind is generally called an inch among the English-speaking people, especially in the south. This, however, is obviously a secondary application, and the word must have been originally applied to islands formed by the branching of rivers; but while many of these, by gradual changes in the river course, lost the character of islands, they retained the name. It is not difficult to understand how, in course of ages, the word inis would in this manner gradually come to be applied to river meadows in general, without any reference to actual insulation.

The principal modern forms of this word are Inis, Inish, Ennis, and Inch, which give names to a vast number of places in every part of Ireland; but whether, in any individual case, the word means an island or a river-holm, must be determined by the physical configuration of the place. In many instances places that were insulated when the names were imposed are now no longer so, in consequence of the drainage of the surrounding marshes or lakes; as in case of Inishargy (p. 373).

Inis and Inish are the forms most generally used, and they are the common appellations of the islands round the coast, and in the lakes and rivers; they are also applied, like inch, to river meadows. There is an island in Lough Erne, containing the ruins of an ancient church, which the annalists often mention by the name of Inis-muighe-samh [moy-sauv], the island of the plain of the sorrel; this island is now, by a very gross mispronunciation, called Inish-macsaint, and has given name to the parish on the mainland.

Near the town of Ennis, in Clare, is a townland called Clonroad, which preserves pretty well the sound of the name as we find it in the annals, Cluain-ramhfhoda, the meadow of the long rowing: the spot where Ennis now stands must have been originally connected in some way with this townland, for the annals usually mention it by the name of Inis-Cluana-ramhfhoda, i. e. the river meadow of Clon-road. Inishannon, on the river Bandon, in Cork, is called in Irish authorities Inis-Eoghanain, i. e. Owenan's, or little Owen's, island or river-holm; Inishnagor, in Donegal and Sligo, is a very descriptive name, signifying the river meadow of the corrs or cranes.

This word very often occurs in the end of names, usually forming with the article the termination na-hinch, as in Coolnahinch, the corner or angle of the island or river meadow. Sometimes it is contracted, as we see in Cleenish, an island near Enniskillen, giving name to a parish, which ought to have been called Cleeninish; for the Irish name, according to the Four Masters, is Claen-inis, i. e. sloping island.

Oilean or oilen is another word for an island which is still used in the spoken language, and enters pretty extensively into names. It is commonly anglicised Illan and Illaun, and these words give names to places all over the country, but far more numerous in Connaught than elsewhere. Thus Illaunanummera, in Tipperary, the island of the ridge, so called no doubt from its shape; Illanfad, in Donegal, long island, the same as Illaunfadda, in Galway; Illaun-inagh, near Inchigeelagh, in Cork, ivy island.

A peninsula is designated by the compound leith-insi [lehinshi], literally half island; and this word gives name to all places now called Lehinch or Lahinch, of which, besides a village in Clare (which is mentioned by the Four Masters), there are several in other parts of Ireland. The word is shortened in Loughlynch, in the parish of Billy, Antrim, which ought to have been called Loughlehinch, as it is written in the Four Masters Loch-leithinnsi, the lake of the peninsula; for a lake existed there down to a recent period.

The word ros, according to Cormac's Glossary, has three meanings—namely, a promontory or peninsula, a wood, and flaxseed; and in the first two senses it is used in the formation of names. By some accident of custom, the two meanings are now restricted in point of locality; for in the southern half of Ireland, ros is generally understood only in the sense of wood, while in the north, this application is lost, and it means only a peninsula.

Yet there are many instances of the application of this term to a peninsula in the south, showing that it was formerly so understood there. A well known example is Ross castle, on the lower lake of Killarney, so called from the little ros or point on which it was built. Between the middle and lower lakes is the peninsula of Muckross, so celebrated for the beauty of its scenery, and for its abbey; its Irish name is Muc-ros, the peninsula of the pigs; which is also the name of a precipitous head-land near Killybegs, in Donegal, and of several other places. And west of Killarney, near the head of Dingle bay, is a remarkable peninsula called Rossbehy, or Rossbegh, the latter part of which indicates that it was formerly covered with birch trees.

There is a parish in Leitrim called Rossinver, which takes its name from a point of land running into the south part of Lough Melvin; Rosinbhir, the peninsula of the river mouth. Rossory, near Enniskillen, is called in the Four Masters, Ros-airthir, eastern peninsula, of which the modern name is a corruption. Portrush, in Antrim, affords an excellent illustration of the use of this word; it takes its name from the well known point of basaltic rock which juts into the sea:—Port-ruis, the landing place of the peninsula.

Traigh or tracht [trā, traght] signifies a strand; it is found in the Zeuss MSS., and corresponds with Lat. tractus, Welsh traeth, and Cornish trait. The first form is that always adopted in modern names, and it is generally represented by tra, traw, or tray. One of the best known examples of its use is Tralee, in Kerry, which the Four Masters call Traigh-Li, the strand of the Lee, a little river which runs into the sea there, but which is now covered over. Tralee, in the parish of Ardtrea, Derry, has a different origin, the Irish name being Traigh-liath, grey strand. Tramore, near Waterford, great strand; Trawnamaddree, in Cork, the strand of the dogs.

Ballintra, when it occurs on the coast, means the town of the strand; as, for instance, near Dunluce, in Antrim, where the name is slightly changed to Ballintrae; but inland, it is from Baile-an-tsraitha, the town of the sraith or river holm. Baltray, strand town, is the name of a village near the mouth of the Boyne. There is a beautiful white strand at Ventry, in Kerry, from which the place got the name of Fionn-traigh (Fionn, white); Hanmer calls it ventra, which is an intermediate step between the ancient and modern forms.

CHAPTER IV.

WATER, LAKES, AND SPRINGS.

THE common Irish word for water is uisce [iska]; it occurs in the Zeuss MSS., where it glosses aqua, with which it is also cognate. It is pretty extensively used in local names, and it has some derivatives, which give it a wider circulation. It occurs occasionally in the beginning of names, but generally in the end, and its usual forms are iska, isky, and isk.

At A. D. 465, the Four Masters record that Owen, son of Niall of the Nine Hostages (see p. 129 supra), died of grief for his brother Conall Gulban, and that he was buried at Uisce-chaein, whose name signifies beautiful water. This place is now called Eskaheen, preserving very nearly the old sound; it is situated near Muff, in Inishowen, and it received its name from a fine spring, where, according to Colgan, there anciently existed a monastery. No tradition of Owen is preserved there now. (See O'Don. Four Mast. I., 146).

Knockaniska, the name of some places in Waterford, is the hill of the water; there is a parish in Wicklow, called Killiskey, another in Wexford called Killisk, and Killiskea is a townland in King's County, all modern forms of Cill-uisce, the church of the water. Balliniska and Ballynisk are the names of two townlands in Limerick, both signifying the town of the water; and the village of Ballisk, near Donabate, in Dublin, has the same name, only without the article. Ballyhisky, in Tipperary, is a different name, viz., Bealach-uisce, the road of the water, the h in the present name representing the ch of bealach.

Eisc [esk], is in some parts of Ireland, especially in the south, applied to the track of a stream, or a channel cut by water; and it is evidently connected with uisce. It has given name to some townlands called Esk, in Kerry; and to Eskenacartan, in Cork, the stream-track of the forge.

Loch signifies a lake, cognate with Lat. lacus, English lake, &c. The word is applied both in Ireland and Scotland, not only to lakes, but to arms of the sea, of which there are hundreds of examples round the coasts of both countries. The almost universal anglicised form in this country is lough, but in Scotland, they have preserved the original loch unchanged. As the word is well known, and seldom disguised in obscure forms, a few examples of its use will be sufficient here.

The lake names of Ireland are generally made up of this word followed by some limiting term, such as a man's name, an adjective, &c. Thus the lakes of Killarney were anciently, and are often still, called collectively, Lough Leane; and according to the Dinnsenchus, they received that name from Lean of the white teeth, a celebrated artificer, who had his forge on the shore. Lough Conn, in Mayo, is called in the Book of Ballymote, and other authorities, Loch-Con, literally the lake of the hound; but it is probable that Con, or as it would stand in the nominative, Cu, is here also a man's name. Loughrea, in Galway, is called in the annals Loch-riabhach, grey lake.

Great numbers of townlands, villages, and parishes, take their names from small lakes, as in the widely extended name, Ballinlough or Ballylough, the town of the lake. In numerous cases the lakes have been dried up, either by natural or artificial drainage, leaving no trace of their existence except the names.

The diminutive lochan is of very general occurrence in the anglicised forms Loughan, Loughane and Loughaun, all names of places, which were so called from "small lakes." There is a place in Westmeath, near Athlone, called Loughanaskin, whose Irish name is Lochán-easgann, the little lake of the eels; in the county Clare is a townland called Loughaunnaweel-aun, Lochán-na-bhfaeileán, the little lake of the sea-gulls; Loughanreagh near Coleraine, in Londonderry, grey lakelet; and Loughanstown, the name of several places in Limerick, Meath, and Westmeath, is a translation from Baile-an-locháin, the town of the little lake.

Turlough is a term very much used in the west of Ireland; it literally signifies dried lake, from tur, dry; and it is applied to a lake which dries up in summer, exhibiting generally, at that season, a coarse scrubby, marshy, surface, which is often used for pasture. It gives name to several places in the counties west of the Shannon (including Clare), a few of which are mentioned by the Four Masters, who write the word turlach.

Wells have been at all times held in veneration in Ireland. It appears from the most ancient Lives of St. Patrick, and from other authorities, that before the introduction of Christianity, they were not only venerated, but actually worshipped; and some of the well customs that have descended even to our own day, seem to be undoubted vestiges of this pagan adoration.

After the general spread of the Faith, the people's affection for wells was not only retained but intensified; for most of the early preachers of the Gospel established their humble foundations—many of them destined to grow in after years into great religious and educational institutions—beside those fountains, whose waters at the same time, supplied the daily wants of the the little communities, and served for the baptism of converts. In this manner most of our early saints became associated with wells, and hundreds of them still retain the names of these holy men, who converted and baptized the pagan multitudes on their margins.

The most common Irish word for a well is tobar; it enters into names all over Ireland, and it is subject to very little alteration from its original form. Tober is the name of about a dozen townlands, and begins those of more than 130 others, all of them called from wells, and many from wells associated with the memory of patron saints. The following are a few characteristic examples. At Ballintober, in Mayo, there was a holy well called Tober Stingle, which was blessed by St. Patrick; and the place was therefore called Ballintober Patrick, the town of St. Patrick's well, which is its general name in the annals. It was also called Baile-na-craibhi [Ballynacreeva: Book of Lecan], the town of the branchy tree, which is still partly retained in the name of the adjacent townland of Creevagh. This well has quite lost its venerable associations; for it is called merely Tobermore (great well), and is not esteemed holy. (See O'Don. in "Hy Fiachrach," p. 191.) Ballintober and Ballytober (the town of the well), are the names of about twenty-four townlands distributed through the four provinces (see p. 243 supra).

Tobercurry, in Sligo, is called in Irish, and written by Mac Firbis, Tobar-an-choire, the well of the caldron, from its shape. Toberbunny, near Cloughran, in Dublin, signifies the well of the milk (Tobar-bainne), and Toberlownagh, in Wicklow, has nearly the same meaning (Tober-learnachta); both being so called probably from the softness of their waters. Some wells take their names from the picturesque old trees that overshadow them, and which are preserved by the people with great veneration; such as Toberbilly, in Antrim, Tobar-bile, the well of the ancient tree.

In case of some holy wells, it was the custom to visit them and perform devotions, on particular days of the week; and this has been commemorated by such names as Toberaheena, which is that of a well and village in Tipperary, signifying the well of Friday. A great many wells in different parts of the country are called Tobar-righ-an-domhnaigh [Toberreendowney], literally the well of the King of Sunday (i. e. of God); one of which gave name to the village of Toberreendoney, in Galway. It is probable that these were visited on Sundays, and they are generally called in English, Sunday's Well, as in case of the place of that name near Cork.

Sometimes tobar takes the form of Tipper, which is the name of a parish in Kildare, and of two townlands in Longford; Tipperstown, in Dublin and Kildare, is only a half translation from Baile-an-tobair, the town of the well; Tipperkevin, St. Kevin's well.

Tióbrad is another form of tobar, which is also very common, and gives name to sixteen townlands scattered through the four provinces, now called Tubbrid. It takes other forms, however, as we find in Clontibret, in Monaghan, which the annalists write Cluain-tiobrait, the meadow of the spring. The well that gave name to the town of Tipperary, and thence to the county, was situated near the Main-street, but it is now closed up; it is called in all the Irish authorities, Tiobrad-Arann, the well of Ara (Ara, gen. Arann), the ancient territory in which it was situated.

Uaran or fuaran is explained by Colgan, "a living fountain, or fresh or cold water springing from the earth." It is not easy to say whether the initial f is radical or not; if it be, the word is obviously derived from fuar, cold; if not, it comes from ur, fresh; and Colgan's explanation leaves the question undecided.

This word gives name to Oranmore, in Galway, which the Four Masters call Uaran-mór, great spring. Oran, in Roscommon, was once a place of great consequence, and is frequently mentioned in the annals; it contains the ruins of a church and round tower; and the original uaran, or spring, is a holy well, which to this day is much frequented by pilgrims.

Oran occurs pretty often in names, such as Knock-anoran (knock, a hill), in Queen's County and Cork; Ballinoran, and Ballynoran (Bally, a town), the names of many townlands through the four provinces; Tinoran, in Wicklow, Tigh-an-uarain, the house of the spring.

CHAPTER V.

RIVERS, STREAMLETS, AND WATERFALLS.

THE Irish language has two principal words for a river—abh or abha [aw or ow], and abhainn, which are identified in meaning in Cormac's Glossary, in the following short passage:—"Abh, i. e. abhainn." There are many streams in Ireland designated by abh; and it also enters into the names of numerous townlands and villages, which have a stream flowing through or by them.

The word is used simply as the name of a small river in Wicklow, the Ow, i. e. the river, rising on the south-eastern slope of Lugnaquilla; Awbeg or Owbeg, little river, is the name of many streams, so called to distinguish them from larger rivers near them, or to which they are tributary. The Ounageeragh, the river of the sheep, is a tributary of the Funcheon, in Cork; and Finnow is the name of several small streams, signifying white or transparent river.

Abhainn [owen], which corresponds with the Sanscr. avani, is in much more general use than abh; and it is the common appellative in the spoken language for a river. It is generally anglicised avon or owen, and there are great numbers of river names through the country formed from these words.

The word abhainn has three different forms in the genitive, viz. abhann, abhanna, and aibhne [oun, ouna, ivnē], which are illustrated in the very common names Ballynahown, Ballynahone, Ballynahowna, and Ballynahivnia, all signifying the town of the river; with abh instead of abhainn, we have Ballynahow, a townland name of frequent occurrence in Munster, but not found elsewhere.

Abhnach [ounagh] is an adjective formation from abhainn, signifying literally "abounding in rivers," but applied to a marshy or watery place; and it gives name to Ounagh, in Sligo; and to Onagh, in Wicklow. The name of Glanworth, in Cork, has been only recently changed from the ancient form, Gleann-amhnach [Book of Rights], i. e. the watery or marshy glen. The parish of Boyounagh, in Galway, takes its name from the original church, which is situated in a bog, and which the Four Masters call Buidheamhnach,

i. e. yellow marsh; and the same name exists in Meath, shortened to Boynagh.

Glaise or glais [glasha, glash] signifies a small stream, a rivulet; it is very often used to give names to streams, and thence to townlands, all over Ireland, and its usual anglicised forms are glasha, glash, and glush. Glashawee and Glashaboy, yellow streamlet, are the names of several little rivers and townlands in Cork; and an equally frequent name in Armagh, Down, and Tyrone, is Tullyglush, generally meaning stream-hill. Douglas is very common both as a river and townland designation all over the country, and it is also well known in Scotland; its Irish form is Dubh-glaise, black stream.

There is a little streamlet at Glasnevin, near Dublin, which winds in a pretty glen through the classic grounds of Delville, and joins the Tolka at the bridge. In far remote ages, beyond the view of history, long before the time of St. Mobhi, some old chief named Naeidhe [Nee] must have resided on its banks; from him it was called Glas-Naeidhen [Glasneean: Four Mast.], i. e. Naeidhe's streamlet; and the name gradually extended to the village, while its original application is quite forgotten. This ancient name is modernized to Glasnevin by the change of dh to v (see p. 50 supra).

The diminutive Glasheen is also in frequent use as a territorial designation; Glasheenaulin, near Castlehaven, in Cork, signifies literally beautiful little streamlet; Glasheena and Glashina is "a place abounding in little streams;" and Ardglushin, in Cavan, signifies the height of the little rivulet.

Sruth [sruh] means a stream, and is in very common use both in the spoken and written language. It is an ancient and primitive word in Irish, being found in the Wb. MS. of Zeuss, where it glosses flumen, rivus; it is almost identical with Sansc. srôta, a river; and its cognates exist in several other languages, such as Welsh frut, Cornish frot, Slavonic struja, Old High German stroum, Eng. stream (Ebel).

Sruth occurs pretty often in names, and its various derivatives, especially the diminutives, have also impressed themselves extensively on the nomenclature of the country. In its simple form it gives names to Srue, in Galway; to Sruh, in Waterford; and to Shrough, in Tipperary: Ballystrew, near Downpatrick, is the town of the stream.

Sruthair [sruhar], a derivative from sruth, is in still more general use, and signifies also a stream; it undergoes various modern modifications, of which the commonest is the change of the final r to l (see p. 46). Abbeyshrute, in Longford, was anciently called Sruthair, i. e. the stream, and it took its present name from a monastery founded there by one of the O'Farrells. Abbeystrowry, in Cork, is the same name, and it was so called from the stream that also gives name to Bealnashrura (ford-mouth of the stream), a village situated at an ancient ford. The change of r to l appears also in Sroolane and Srooleen, which are often applied to little streams in the south, and which are the names of some townlands.

Sruthan [sruhaun], the diminutive of sruth, enters very often into local names in every part of Ireland; and it is peculiarly liable to alteration, both by corruption and by grammatical inflexion, so that it is often completely disguised in modern names. In its simple form it gives name to Sroughan, in Wicklow; and with a t inserted (p. 53), and the aspirate omitted, to Stroan in Antrim, Kilkenny and Cavan. The sound of th in this word is often changed to that of f,

(p. 49), converting it to sruffan or sruffaun, a term in common use in some parts of Ireland, especially in Galway, for a small stream. This change, and the insertion of t, are both seen in Straffan, a village in Kildare, and a station on the Great Southern and Western Railway. And lastly, the substitution of t for s by eclipse (p. 22) leads to still further alteration, which is exemplified in Killeenatruan, in Longford, Cillín-a'-tsruthain, the little church of the stream; Carntrone, in Fermanagh, the monumental heap of the streamlet.

Feadan [faddaun] is a common word for a brook, and it enters largely into local names; it is a diminutive of fead [fad], and the literal meaning of both is a pipe, tube, or whistle; whence in a secondary sense, they came to be applied to those little brooks whose channels are narrow and deep, like a tube.

From this word we get such names as Faddan, Feddan, Fiddan, Fiddane, &c.; Fiddaunnageeroge, near Crossmolina, in Mayo, is the little brook of the keeroges or chafers. With the f sound suppressed under the influence of the article (p. 26), we have Ballyneddan, in Down, and Ballineddan, in Wicklow, Baile-an-fheadain the town of the streamlet. Fedany, in Down, is from the Irish Feadanach, which signifies a streamy place.

Cumar or Comar denotes the meeting of rivers, or of a river with a sheet of water; and it forms part of a considerable number of names. The most usual form in the southern half of Ireland is Cummer, and in the northern, Comber or Cumber, which are very often met with, both simply and in compounds.

Inbhear [inver] means the mouth of a river; "a bay into which a river runs, or a long narrow neck of the sea, resembling a river" (Dr. Todd). The word is pretty common in Ireland, and equally so in Scotland, generally in the form of inver, but it is occasionally obscured by modern contraction. At A. D. 639, the Four Masters record the death of St. Dagan of Inbhear-Daeile, i. e. the mouth of the river Deel; this place retains the old name, modernized to Ennereilly, though the river is no longer called the Deel, but the Pennycomequick. The townland of Dromineer, in Tipperary, which gives name to a parish, is situated where the Nenagh river enters Lough Derg; and hence it is called in Irish Druim-inbhir, the ridge of the river mouth.

It would appear that waterfalls were objects of special notice among the early inhabitants of this country, for almost every fall of any consequence in our rivers has a legend of its own, and has impressed its name on the place in which it is situated. The most common Irish word for a waterfall is eas [ass] or ess, gen. easa [assa]; and the usual modern forms are, for the nominative, ass and ess, and often for the genitive, assa and assy.

Doonass, near Castleconnell, was so called from the great rapid on the Shannon, the Irish name being Dun-easa, the fortress of the cataract; but its ancient name was Eas-Danainne (Four Mast.), the cataract of Danann (for whom see p. 152 supra). The old name of the fall at Caherass, near Croom, in Limerick, was Ess-Maighe (Book of L.) i. e. the waterfall of the river Maigue; and the name Caherass was derived, like Doonass, from a fort built on its margin. There is a fall on the river that flows through Mountmellick, in Queen's county, which has given to the stream the name of Owenass; and in Glendalough is a well-known place where a little river falls from a rock into a deep pool, hence called Pollanass, the pool of the waterfall.

CHAPTER VI.

MARSHES AND BOGS.

THERE are several words in Irish to denote a marsh, all used in the formation of names ; but in thousands of cases the marshes have been drained, and the land placed under cultivation, the names alone remaining to attest the existence of swamps in days long past. One of these words, eanach [annagh], signifies literally a watery place, and is derived from ean, water. In some parts of the country it is applied to a cut-out bog, an application easily reconcilable with the original signification. It appears generally in the forms Annagh, Anna, and Anny, and these, either simply or in combination, give names to great numbers of places in every part of the country.

Annaduff, in Leitrim, is called by the Four Masters, Eanach-dubh, black marsh ; Annabella, near Mallow, has an English look ; but it is the Irish Eanach-bile, the marsh of the old tree ; Annaghaskin, in Dublin, near Bray, the morass of the eels. As a termination this word usually becomes -anny or -enny, in accordance with the sound of the genitive *eanai*gh ; as in Gortananny, in Galway, the field of the marsh ; Inchenny, in Tyrone, which the Four Masters call Inis-eanaigh, the island or river holm of the marsh. In some of the northern counties, this form is adopted in the beginning of names (p. 31), as in Annyalty, in Monaghan, the marsh of the flocks.

Corcach, a marsh—low swampy ground : it is used in every part of Ireland, and assumes various forms, which will be best understood from the following examples.

After St. Finbar, in the sixth century, had spent some years in the wild solitude of Loch Irc, now Gougane Barra, at the source of the Lee, he changed his residence, and founded a monastery on the edge of a marsh near the mouth of the same river, round which a great city subsequently grew up. This swampy place was known for many hundred years afterwards by the name of Corcach-mor or Corcach-mor-Mumhan [Mooan], the great marsh of Munster; of which only the first part has been retained, and even that shortened to one syllable in the present name Cork. The city is still, however, universally called Corcach by those who speak Irish.

Corcagh is the name of several places in other counties; while in the form of Corkey it is found in Antrim and Donegal. And we often meet with the diminutives, Curkeen, Curkin, and Corcaghan, little marsh. Corcas, another form of the word, is also very common, and early English topographical writers on Ireland, often speak of the corcasses or marshes as very numerous. It has given names to many places in the northern counties, now called Corkish, Curkish, Corcashy, Corkashy, &c.

Cuirreach, or as it is written in modern Irish, cur-rach, has two meanings, a race course, and a morass. In its first sense it gives name to the Curragh of Kildare, which has been used as a race course from the most remote ages.* In the second sense, which is the more general, it enters into names in the forms Curra, Curragh, and Curry, which are very common through the four provinces. Curraghmore, great morass, is the name of nearly thirty townlands scattered over the country; Currabaha and Currabeha, the marsh of the birch trees. There are more than thirty places, all in Munster, called Curraheen, little marsh, and this name is sometimes met with in the forms Currin and Curreen.

* See Mr. Hennessy's interesting paper "On the Curragh of Kildare," Proc. R. I. A.

Sescenn, a quagmire, a marshy, boggy, or sedgy place; it occurs in Cormac's Glossary, where it is given as the equivalent of cuirreach. It is used in giving names to places throughout the four provinces; and its usual modern forms are Sheskin and Seskin. When it comes in as a termination, the initial s is often eclipsed by t (p. 22); as we see in Ballinteskin, the name of several places in Leinster, in Irish Baile-an-tsescinn, the town of the quagmire.

Riasg or riasc [reesk] signifies a moor, marsh, or fen. There are nine townlands in Leinster and Munster called Riesk and Reisk; and near Finglas, in Dublin, is a place called Kilreisk, the church of the morass. Rusg is another form of the same word, which is much used in local nomenclature, though it is not given in the dictionaries; occurring commonly as Roosk and Rusk. The old church that gave name to the parish of Tullyrusk, in Antrim, stood in the present grave-yard, which occupies the summit of a gentle hill, rising from marshy ground: hence the name, which Colgan writes Tulach-ruisc, the hill of the morass (Reeves, Eccl. Ant., p. 6). The adjective forms rusgach and rusgaidh [roosky], are in still more general use; they give names to all those places called Roosky, Rooskagh, Roosca, and Rusky, of which there are nearly fifty scattered over the four provinces, all of which were originally fenny or marshy places.

Cala or caladh [calla] has two distinct meanings, reconcilable, however, with each other: 1. In some parts of Ireland it means a ferry, or a landing place for boats; 2. In Longford, Westmeath, Roscommon, Galway, &c., and especially along the course of the Shannon, it is used to signify a low marshy meadow along a river or lake, which is often flooded in winter, but always grassy in summer. Callow, the modernized form, is quite current as an English word in those parts of the country, a "calow meadow" being a very usual expression; and it forms part of the names of a great many places.

Maethail [mwayhill], signifies soft or spongy land, from the root maeth [mway] soft. The best known example of its use is Mohill, in the county Leitrim, which is called in Irish authorities, Maethail-Manchain, from St. Manchan, or Monaghan, who founded a monastery there in the seventh century, and who is still remembered. Mothel is the name of a parish in Waterford, and there is another in Kilkenny, called Mothell, both of which are forms of the same word, having the aspirated t restored (see p. 40). We find it also in other names, such as Cahermohill or Cahermoyle, in Limerick, the stone fort of the soft land; Knockme-hill, in Tipperary, the soft-surfaced hill; and Corraweehill, in Leitrim, the round hill of the wet land. (See Dr. Reeves' learned essay "On the Culdees," Trans. R. I. A., XXIV., 175).

Imleach [imlagh] denotes land bordering on a lake, and hence a marshy or swampy place; the root appears to be imeal, a border or edge. It is a term in pretty common use in names, principally in the forms Emlagh, and Emly. The most remarkable place, whose name is derived from this word, is the village of Emly, in Tipperary, well known as the ancient see of St. Ailbhe, one of the primitive Irish saints. In the Book of Lismore, and, indeed, in all the Irish authorities, it is called Imleach-iobhair, the lake-marsh of the yew tree. The lake, on the margin of which St. Ailbhe selected the site for his establishment, does not now exist, but it is only a few years since the last vestige of it was drained.

Miliuc is applied to low marshy ground, or to land bordering on a lake or river, and seems synonymous with imleach. It occurs in Leinster, Munster, and Ulster, but is much more general in Connaught than in the other provinces; and in the form Meelick, it is the name of about 30 townlands. The old anglicised name of Mountmellick, in Queen's County, which is even still occasionally heard among the people, is Montiaghmeelick, i. e. the bogs or boggy land of the meelick or marsh; and the latter part of the name is still retained by the neighbouring townland of Meelick.

Murbhach, a flat piece of land extending along the sea; a salt marsh. The word occurs as a general term in Cormac's Glossary (voce "tond"), where the sea waves are said to "shave the grass from off the murbhach." In the Book of Rights it is spelled murmhagh, which points to the etymology:—muir, the sea, and magh, a plain—murmhagh, sea-plain.

The name occurs once in the Four Masters, when they mention Murbhach, in Donegal, which is situated near Ballyshannon, and is now called Murvagh. In that county the word is still well understood, and pretty often used to give names to places. In other counties it is changed to Murvey; and it is still further softened in the "Murrow of Wicklow," which is now a beautiful grassy sward, and affords a good illustration of the use of the word.

Muirisc is a sea-shore marsh, and is nearly synonymous with murbhach. There are two places in Connaught of this name, now called Murrisk, both of which are mentioned in the annals—one a district in the north of Sligo, and the other a narrow plain lying between Croagh Patrick and the sea, from which the barony of Murrisk was so called.

Móin [mone], a bog, corresponds with Lat. mons, a mountain, and the Irish word is sometimes understood in this sense. As may be expected from the former and present abundance of bogs in Ireland, we have a vast number of places named from them in every part of the country; but in numerous cases the bogs are cut away, and the land cultivated. The syllable mon, which begins a great number of names, is generally to be referred to this word; but there are many exceptions, which, however, are in general easy to be distinguished.

Monabraher, near Limerick, is called by the Four Masters, Moin-na-mbrathar, the bog of the friars; and there are two townlands in Cork, one in Galway, and another in Waterford, of the same name, but spelled a little differently. Monalour, near Lismore, signifies the bog of the lepers; Monamintra, a parish in Waterford, is anglicised from Moin-na-mbaintreabhaigh, the bog of the widows; Monanearla, near Thurles, the earl's bog.

As a termination, this word often takes the form of mona, as is seen in Ballynamona, the town of the bog, the name of a great many places in Leinster, Connaught, and Munster. Sometimes the m of this termination is aspirated (p. 19), as in Ardvone, near Ardagh, in Limerick, which is in Irish, Ard-mhoin, high bog.

The diminutive Moneen is also very much used, being the name of more than twenty townlands in all the four provinces. Moneenagunnell, in King's County, is the little bog of the candles; Moneenabrone, in Cavan, the little bog of the quern. The adjective mointeach signifies a boggy place, and it gives name to several places now called Montiagh and Montiaghs.

CHAPTER VII.

ANIMALS.

ALL our native animals, without a single exception, have been commemorated in names of places. In the course of long ages, human agency effects vast changes in the distribution of animals, as well as in the other physical conditions of the country; some are encouraged and increased; some are banished to remote and hilly districts; and others become altogether extinct. But by a study of local names we can tell what animals formerly abounded, and we are able to identify the very spots resorted to by each particular kind.

Some writers have attempted to show that certain animal were formerly worshiped in Ireland, so that the literary public have lately become quite familiarized with such terms as "bovine cultus," "porcine cultus," &c.; and the main argument advanced is, that the names of those animals are interwoven with our local nomenclature. But, if this argument be allowed, it will prove that our forefathers had the most extensive pantheon of any people on the face of the earth:—they must have adored all kinds of animals indiscriminately—not only cows and pigs, but also geese, sea-gulls, and robin-redbreasts, and even pismires, midges, and fleas.* I instance this, not so much to illustrate the subject I have in hands, as to show to what uses the study of local names may be turned, when not ballasted by sufficient knowledge, and directed by sound philosophy.

The cow. The most general Irish word for a cow is bo, not only at the present day, but in the oldest MSS.: in the Sg. MS. of Zeuss it glosses bos, with which it is also cognate. It is most commonly found in our present names in the simple form bo, which, when it is a termination, is usually translated “of the cow,” though it might be also “of the cows.”

Aghaboe, in Queen’s County, where St. Canice of Kilkenny had his principal church, is mentioned by many Irish authorities, the most ancient of whom is Adamnan, who has the following passage in Vit. Col., II. 13, which settles the meaning:—“St. Canice being in the monastery which is called in Latin Campulus bovis (i. e. the field of the cow), but in Irish Achedbou.” This was the name of the place before the time of St. Canice, who adopted it unchanged. The parish of Drumbo, in Down, is called Druimbo by the Four Masters, that is, the cow’s ridge; Dunboe, in Londonderry, and Ardboe, in Tyrone, the fortress and the height of the cow.

When the word occurs in the end of names in the genitive plural, the b is often eclipsed by m (p. 21), forming the termination -namoe, of the cows; as in

* We have many names from all these:—Coumshingaun, a well-known valley and lake in the Cummeragh mountains, south-east of Clonmel, the glen of the pismires; Cloonnameeltoge, in the parish of Kilmainemore, Mayo, the meadow of the midges; and in the parish of Rath, county Clare, is a hill called Knock-aunnadrakady, the little hill of the fleas.

Annamoe, in Wicklow, which would be written in Irish, Ath-na-mbo, the ford of the cows, indicating that the old ford, now spanned by a bridge at the village, was the usual crossing place for the cows of the neighbourhood.

Laogh [lea] means a calf; it enters into names generally in the form of lee; and this, and the articulated terminations, -nalee and -nalea, are of frequent occurrence, signifying "of the calves." Ballinalee, in Longford and Wicklow, is properly written in Irish, Bél-athana-laogh, the ford-mouth of the calves; Clonleigh, near Lifford, is called by the Four Masters, Cluain-laogh, the calves' meadow; in Wexford there is a parish of the same name, and in Clare another, which is called Clonlea. Another Irish word for a calf is gamhan [gowan], which is also much used in the formation of names, as in Clonygowan, in King's County, which the annalists write Cluain-na-ngamhan, the meadow of the calves.

A bull is called in Irish tarbh, a word which exists in cognate forms in many languages; in the three Celtic families—Old Irish, Welsh, and Cornish—it is found in the respective forms of tarb, taru, and tarow, while the Old Gaulish is tarvos; and all these are little different from the Gr. tauros and Lat. taurus. A great number of places in every part of Ireland have taken their names from bulls, and the word tarbh is in general easily recognized in all its modern forms.

There are several mountains in different counties called Knockaterriff, Knockatarriv, and Knockatarry, all signifying the hill of the bull. Sometimes the t is aspirated to h (p. 20), as in Drumherriff and Drumhar-riff, a townland name common in the Ulster counties and in Leitrim, the ridge of the bull. Clontarf, near Dublin, is called in all the Irish authorities Cluain- tarbh, the meadow of the bulls, and there are several similar names through the country, such as Cloontarriff, in Mayo, and Cloontarriv, in Kerry.

Damh, an ox. Devenish island, near Enniskillen, is called in the annals Daimh-inis, which, in the Life of St. Aidus, is translated the island of the oxen; and there are three other islands of the same name in Mayo, Roscommon, and Galway. There is a peninsula west of Ardara, in Donegal, called Dawros head, the Irish name of which is Damh-ros, the headland of the oxen; and there are several other places of the same name in Galway, Sligo, and Kerry. We find the word also in such names as Dooghcloon, Doughcloyne, and Doughloon, which are modern forms of Damh-chluain, ox-meadow.

In the end of names this word undergoes a variety of transformations. It is often changed to -duff, as in Clonduff, in Down, which is called in O'Clery's Calendar Cluain-daimh, the meadow of the ox (see Reeves, Eccles. Ant., p. 115). In other cases the d disappears under the influence of aspiration (p. 19), as in Cloonaff, Clonuff, Cloniff, and Clooniff, all the same names as Clonduff. And often the d is eclipsed by n (p. 21), as in Coolnanav, near Dungarvan in Waterford, Cuil-na-ndamh, the corner of the oxen.

The sheep. A sheep is called in Irish caera [kaira], gen. caerach, which are the forms given in the Zeuss MSS. The word seems to have originally denoted cattle in general, for we find that caerachd denotes cattle, and in Sanscrit, caratha signifies pecus. It is found most commonly in the end of names, forming the termination -nageeragh, or without the article, -keeragh, "of the sheep," as in Ballynageeragh, the town of the sheep. The village of Glenagarey, near Kingstown, Dublin, took its name from a little dell, which was called in Irish, Gleann-na-gcaerach, the glen of the sheep. There are several islands round the coast called Inishkeeragh, the island of sheep, or mutton island, as it is sometimes translated, which must have been so called from the custom of sending over sheep to graze on them in spring and summer.

The horse. We have several Irish words for a horse, the most common of which are each and capall. Each [agh] is found in several families of languages; the old Irish form is ech; and it is the same word as the Sansc. açva, Gr. hippos (Eolic ikkos), Lat. equus, and Old Sax. ehu. Each is very often found in the beginning of names, and in this case generally takes the form of augh. Aughinish and Aughnish are the names of several places in different parts of the country, and are modern forms of Each-inis (Four Mast.) horse island. They must have been so called, because they were favourite horse pastures, like "The Squince," and Horse Island, near Glandore, "which produce a wonderful sort of herbage that recovers and fattens diseased horses to admiration." (Smith, Hist. of Cork, I. 271).

In the end of names it commonly forms the postfix -ach; as in Russagh, in Westmeath, which the Four Masters write Ros-each, the wood of horses; Bellan-anagh, in Cavan, the ford-mouth of the horses; Cloonagh and Clonagh, horse meadow. Sometimes it is in the genitive singular, as in Kinneigh near Iniskeen, in Cork, ceann-ech (Four Mast.), the head or hill of the horse; the same name as Kineigh, in Kerry, and Kinnea, in Cavan and Donegal.

Capall, the other word for a horse, is the same as Gr. kaballēs, Lat. caballus, and Rus. kobyła. It is pretty common in the end of names, in the form of -capple, or with the article, -nagappul or -nagapple, as in Knocknagapple and Knocknagappul, the hill of the horses.

The goat. The word gabhar [gower], a goat, is common to the Celtic, Latin, and Teutonic languages; the old Irish form is gabar, which corresponds with Welsh gafar, Corn. gavar, Lat. caper, Ang.-Sax. haefer, Eng. heifer.* This word very often takes the form of gower, gour or gore in anglicised names, as in Glenagower, in Limerick, Gleann-na-ngabhar, the glen of the goats; Ballynagore, goats' town.

The deer. Ireland formerly abounded in deer; they were chased with greyhounds, and struck down by spears and arrows; and in our ancient writings—in poems, tales, and romances—deer, stags, does, and fawns, figure conspicuously. They are, as might be expected, commemorated in great numbers of local names, and in every part of the country. The word fiadh [fee] originally meant any wild animal, and hence we have the adjective fiadhan [feean], wild; but its meaning has been gradually narrowed, and in Irish writings it is almost universally applied to a deer. It is generally much disguised in local names, so that it is often not easy to distinguish its modern forms from those of fiach, a raven, and each, a horse. The f often disappears under the influence of the article (p. 26), as will be seen in the following examples:—

The well-known pass of Keimaneigh, on the road

* There is a curious phenomenon sometimes met with in language, namely, the transfer of a name from one species of animals or plants to another. For instance, the Irish damh, an ox, corresponds with Latin dama, a deer; the Greek phēgos signifies an oak, while the corresponding Latin, Gothic, and English terms—fagus, bōka, and beech—are applied to the beech-tree. See this question curiously discussed in Max Muller's Lectures, 2nd Series, p. 222.

from Inchigeelagh to Glengarriff, in Cork, is called in Irish, Ceim-an-fhiaidh, the pass of the deer; Drumanee in Derry, and Knockanee, in Limerick and Westmeath, both signify the deer's hill. In some parts of the south the final g is sounded, as in Knockaneag, in Cork, the same as the last name.

Os signifies a fawn. In the end of names, when the word occurs in the genitive plural, it is usually made -nanuss, while in the singular, it is anglicised ish, or with the article, anish. There is a conspicuous mountain north of Macroom, in Cork, called Mullaghanish, the summit of the fawn. Not far from Buttevant, in the county of Cork, is a hill called Knocknanuss—Cnoc-na-nos, the hill of the fawns—where a bloody battle was fought in November, 1647: in this battle was slain the celebrated Colkitto, Alasdram More, or Alexander Macdonnell, the ancestor of the Macdonnells of the Glens of Antrim, whose present chief is the Right Hon. Alexander Macdonnell, of the Board of Education.

Eilit, gen. eilte [ellit, eltě] is a doe; Gr. ellos, a fawn; O. H. Ger. elah; Ang.-Sax. elch. The word occurs in Irish names generally in the forms elty, ilty, elt, or ilt; Clonelty, in Limerick and Fermanagh, and Cloonelt, in Roscommon, the meadow of the doe; Annahilt, in Down, Eanach-eilte, the doe's marsh.

The pig. If Ireland has obtained some celebrity in modern times for its abundance of pigs, the great numbers of local names in which the animal is commemorated show that they abounded no less in the days of our ancestors. The Irish language has several words for a pig, but the most usual is muc, which corresponds with the Welsh moch, and Cornish moh. The general anglicised form of the word is muck; and -namuck is a termination of frequent occurrence, signifying "of the pigs." There is a well-known hill near the Galties, in Tipperary, called Slievenamuck, the mountain of the pigs. In Lough Derg, on the Shannon, is a small island, much celebrated for an ecclesiastical establishment; it is called in the annals, Muic-inis, hog island, or Muic-inis-Riagail, from St. Riagal or Regulus, a contemporary of St. Columkille. This name would be anglicised Muckinish, and there are several other islands of the name in different parts of Ireland.

In early times, when woods of oak and beech abounded in this country, it was customary for kings and chieftains to keep great herds of swine, which fed in the woods on masts, and were tended by swineherds. St. Patrick, it is well-known, was a swineherd in his youth to Milcho, king of Dalaradia; and numerous examples might be quoted from our ancient histories, romances, and poems, to show the prevalence of this custom.

There are several words in Irish to denote a place where swine were fed, or where they resorted or slept; the most common of which is muclach, which is much used in the formation of names. Mucklagh, its most usual form, is the name of many places in Leinster, Ulster, and Connaught; and scattered over the same provinces, there are about twenty-eight townlands called Cornamucklagh, the round hill of the piggeries. Muiceannach also signifies a swine haunt, and it gives names to about nineteen townlands in the four provinces, now called Muckanagh, Muckenagh, and Mucknagh. Muckelty, Mucker, Muckera, and Muckery, all townland names, signify still the same thing—a place frequented by swine for feeding or sleeping.

Torc [turk] signifies a boar; it is found in the Sg. MS. of Zeuss, as a gloss on aper. Wild boars formerly abounded in Ireland; they are often mentioned in old poems and tales; and hunting the boar was one of the favourite amusements of the people. Turk, the usual modern form of torc, is found in great numbers of names. Kanturk, in Cork, is written by the Four Masters, Ceann-tuirc, the head or hill of the boar; the name shows that the little hill near the town must have been formerly a resort of one or more of these animals; and we may draw the same conclusion with regard to the well-known Torc mountain in Killarney. By the aspiration of the t, the genitive form, tuirc, becomes hirk; as in Drumhirk, a name of frequent occurrence in Ulster, which represents the Irish, Druimthuir, the boar's ridge.

The dog. There are two words in common use for a dog, cu and madadh or madragh [madda, maddra], which enter extensively into local names. Of the two forms of the latter, madradh is more usual in the south, and madadh in the rest of Ireland; they often form the terminations -namaddy, -namaddoo, and -namaddra, of the dogs, or in the genitive singular, -avaddy, -avaddoo, and -avaddra, of the dog.

The other word, cu, is in the modern language always applied to a greyhound, but according to O'Brien, it anciently signified any fierce dog. It is found in many other languages as well as Irish, as for example, in Greek, kuōn; Latin, canis; Welsh, ci; Gothic, hunds; English, hound; all different forms of the same primitive word. This term is often found in the beginning of names; as in Conlig, in Down, the stone of the hounds; Convoy, in Donegal, and Conva, in Cork, both from Con-mhagh, hound-plain; and as a termination it usually assumes the same form, as in Clooncon and Cloncon, the hounds' meadow; except when the c is eclipsed (p. 21), as we find in Coolnagun, in Tipperary and Westmeath, the corner of the hounds.

The rabbit. It is curious that the Irish appear to have grouped the rabbit and the hare with two very different kinds of animals—the former with the dog, and the latter with the deer. Coinín [cunneen], the Irish word for a rabbit, is a diminutive of cu, and means literally a little hound; the corresponding Latin word, cuniculus, is also a diminutive; and the Scandinavian kanina, Danish kanin, and English coney, all belong to the same family.

The word coinín is in general easily recognised in names; for it commonly forms one of the terminations, -coneen, -nogoneen, or -nagoneeny, as in Kyle-nagoneeny, in Limerick, Coill-na-gcoinínidhe, the wood of the rabbits; Carrickconeen, in Tipperary, rabbit rock. The termination is varied in Lisnagun-ion, in Monaghan, the fort of the rabbits.

A rabbit warren is denoted by coinicér [cunnickere], which occurs in all the provinces under several forms—generally, however, easily recognised. In Carlow it is made Coneykeare; in Galway, Conicar; in Limerick, Conigar; and in King's County, Conicker. It is Connigar and Cunnigare in Kerry; Cunnaker, in Mayo; Cunnicar, in Louth; Cunnigar, in Waterford; and Kinnegar, in Donegal. In the pronunciation of the original the c and n coalesce very closely (like c and n in cnoc, p. 348), and the former is often only faintly heard. In consequence of this, the c sometimes disappears altogether from anglicised names, of which Nicker, in Limerick, and Nickeres (rabbit warrens), in Tipperary, afford characteristic examples.

The wolf. This island, like Great Britain, was formerly much infested with wolves; they were chased like the wild boar, partly for sport, and partly with the object of exterminating them; and large dogs of a particular race, called wolfdogs, which have only very recently become extinct, were kept and trained for the purpose. After the great war in the seventeenth century, wolves increased to such an extent, and their ravages became so great, as to call for State interference, and wolf-hunters were appointed in various parts of Ireland. The last wolf was killed only about 160 years ago.

In Irish there are two distinct original words for a wolf, fael and bréach. Fael, though often found in old writings, is not used by itself in the modern language, the general word for a wolf now being faelchu, formed by adding cu a hound, to the original. There is a little rocky hill near Swords in Dublin, called Feltrim, the name of which indicates that it must have been formerly a retreat of wolves; in a gloss in the Felire of Aengus, it is written Faeldruim, i. e. wolf-hill.

The other term bréach is more frequently found in local names, especially in one particular compound, namely breach-mhagh [breagh-vah], wolf-field, which in various modern forms gives names to about twenty townlands. In Clare, it occurs eight times, and it is anglicised Breaghva, except in one instance where it is made Breaffy; in Donegal, Longford, and Armagh, it is Breaghy; in Sligo and Mayo, Breaghwy; while in Fermanagh (near Enniskillen) it becomes Breagho, and in Kerry, Breahig. In Cork, it is still further corrupted to Britway, the name of a parish, which in Pope Nicholas's Taxation, is written Breghmagh.

There is still another term—though not an original one—for a wolf—namely, mac-tire [macteera], which literally signifies “son of the country,” in allusion to his lonely haunts; by this name he is commemorated in Knockaunvictiera, the little hill of the wolf, a townland in the parish of Kilmoon, Clare, where, no doubt, some old wolf long baffled the huntsman's spear, and the wolfdog's fang.

The fox. Sionnach [shinnagh] is the Irish word for a fox—genitive sionnaigh [shinny]; it often occurs in the end of names, in the forms -shinny and -shinnagh; as in Monashinnagh, in Limerick, the bog of the foxes; Coolnashinnagh, in Tipperary, and Coolnashinny, in Cavan, the foxes' corner.

The badger. These animals, like many others, must have been much more common formerly than now, as there are numbers of places all over Ireland deriving their names from them. The Irish word for a badger is broc [bruck]; it is usually anglicised brock, and it is very often found as a termination in the forms -brock, -nabrock, and -namrock, all signifying "of the badgers." Clonbrock, in Galway, the seat of lord Clonbrock, is called in Irish, cluain-broc, the meadow of the badgers; and the same name occurs in King's and Queen's Counties, while it takes the form of Cloonbrock in Longford.

Brocach signifies a haunt of badgers—a badger warren, and gives name to a great many townlands in the four provinces, now called Brockagh, Brocka, and Brockey. In Cormac's Glossary the form used is broiceannach, which is represented by Bruckana, in Kilkenny, and by Brockna, in Wicklow. There are several Irish modifications of this word in different parts of the country, which have given rise to corresponding varieties in anglicised names; such as Brockernagh, in King's County, Brocklagh, in Longford; Brockly, in Cavan; Brockra and Brockry, in Queen's County; all meaning a badger warren.

Birds. Among the animals whose names are found impressed on our local nomenclature, birds hold a prominent place, almost all our native species being commemorated. En [ain] is the Irish for a bird at the present day as well as from the most remote antiquity, the word being found in the Sg. MS. of Zeuss, as a gloss on avis. It appears under various modifications in considerable numbers of names, often forming the termination -naneane, of the birds; as in Rathnaneane and Ardnaneane, in Limerick, the fort, and the height, of the birds.

The eagle. In several wild mountainous districts, formerly the haunts of eagles, these birds are remembered in local names. Iolar [iller] is the common Irish word for an eagle, and in anglicised names it usually forms the terminations, -iller, -ilra, and -ulra; as in Slieveanilra, the eagle's mountain, in Clare; and Coumaniller, the eagle's hollow, on the side of Keeper Hill, in Tipperary, under a rocky precipice. The word assumes other forms—as for example, in Drumillard, the name of four townlands in Monaghan, which is the same as Drumiller in Cavan, the ridge of the eagle.

Seabhac [shouk or shoke] means a hawk, and is cognate with the Ang.-Sax. hafok, and Eng. hawk. It forms part of the name of Carrickshock, a well-known place near Knocktopher in Kilkenny, which is called in Irish, Carraig-seabhaic, the hawk's rock, nearly the same name as Carricknashoke, in Cavan. The initial s is often eclipsed by t, as in Craigatuke, in Tyrone, Craig-a'-tseabhaic, the same as Carrickshock.

Crows. The different species of the crow kind are very well distinguished in Irish, and the corresponding terms are often found in local names. Préachán [prēhaun] is a generic term, standing for any ravenous kind of bird, the various species being designated by qualifying terms: standing by itself, however, it usually signifies a crow, and as such occurs in Ardnapreaghaun, in Limerick, Ard-na-bpreachan, the hill of the crows.

Feannog [fannoge] signifies a royston or scald crow: we find it in Tirfinnóg, near Monaghan, the district of the scald crows; in Carnfunnock, in Antrim, where there must have been an old monumental heap, frequented by these birds; and Toberfinnick, in Wexford, the scald crows' well. Buffanoky, in Limerick, represents the Irish Both-fionnoice, the hut or tent of the royston crow. Very often the f is eclipsed (p. 22), as in Mullanavannog, in Monaghan, Mullach-na-bhfeannog, the scald crows' hill.

A raven is designated by the word fiach [feeagh], which, in anglicised names, it is often difficult to distinguish from fiadh, a deer. There is a remarkable rock over the Barrow, near Graiguenamanagh, called Benaneha, or in Irish Beann-an-fheiche, the cliff of the raven; Lissaneigh, in Sligo, is the raven's fort; Carrickaneagh, in Tipperary, and Carrickanee, in Donegal, the raven's rock. The genitive plural with an eclipse (p. 22) is seen in Mulnaveagh, near Lifford, and Mullynaveagh, in Tyrone, the hill of the ravens.

Bran is another word for a raven: it is given in Zeuss (Gram. Celt., p. 46) as the equivalent of corvus, and it is explained fiach in Cormac's Glossary. Brankill, the name of some places in Cavan, signifies raven wood; and Rathbranagh near Croom, in Limerick, the fort of the ravens.

The seagull. This bird is denoted by the two diminutives faileán and faileóg [feelaun, feeloge]; and both are reproduced in modernized names, often forming the terminations -naweelaun, -naweeloge, and -eelan. Carrownaweelaun, in Clare, represents the sound of the Irish ceathramhadh-na-bhfaeileán, the quarter-land of the sea-gulls; Loughnaweeloge, and Loughaunaweelaun, the names of some lakes and townlands in different counties, signify the sea-gulls' lake; and the same name is reduced to Lough Wheelion, in King's county.

The plover. Feadog [faddoge], a plover. It generally occurs in the end of names in the forms -viddoge, -vaddoge, -faddock, &c.; as in Ballynavaddog, in Meath, and Balfeddock, in Louth, the townland of the plovers; Barranafaddock, near Lismore, the plovers' hill-top.

The crane. Corr means any bird of the crane kind, the different species being distinguished by qualifying terms. Standing alone, however, it is always understood to mean a heron—generally called a crane in Ireland; and it is used very extensively in forming names, especially in marshy or lake districts, commonly in the forms cor, gor, and gore. Loughanagore near Kilbeggan, in Westmeath, in Irish Lochan-na-gcorr, signifies the little lake of the cranes; the same as Corlough, the name of several lakes and townlands in different counties.

The corncrake. Tradhnach or traenach means a corncrake; it is pronounced tryna in the south and west, but traina elsewhere, and anglicised accordingly. Cloonatreane, in Fermanagh, signifies the meadow of the corncrakes; Lugatryna, in Wicklow, the corncrake's hollow.

The goose. The Irish word gédh [gay], a goose, has its cognates in many languages:—Sanscr. hansa; Gr. chen; Lat. anser; O. H. Ger. kans; Ang.-Sax. gos and gandra; Eng. goose and gander. It occurs in names almost always in the form gay; as in Monagay,

• a parish in Limerick, which is called in Irish, Moin-a'-ghédh, the bog of the goose, probably from being frequented by flocks of wild geese: it is not easy to conjecture what gave origin to the singular name, Ballingayrour, i. e. Baile-an-ghédh-reamhair, the town of the fat goose, which we meet with in the same county, but it might have been from the fact, that the place was considered a good pasture for fattening geese. Gay island, in Fermanagh, is not an English name, as it looks; it is a half translation from Inis-na-ngédh, i. e. goose island.

The duck. The word lacha, gen. lachan, a duck, is occasionally, though not often, found in names; the townland of Loughloughan, in the parish of Skerry, Antrim, took its name from a little lake called Loch-lachan, the lake of the ducks; and this and Loughnaloughan, are the names of several other lakelets and pools in different parts of the country.

In the west of Ireland, the word cadhan [coin] is in common use to denote a barnacle duck; we find it in Gortnagoyne, i. e. Gort-na-gcadhan, the name of a townland in Galway, and of another in Roscommon; and there is a lake in the parish of Burriscarra, Mayo, called Loughnagoyne—these two names meaning, respectively, the field and the lake of the barnacle ducks.

The cuckoo—Irish cuach [coogh]. From the great number of places all over the country containing this word, it is evident that the bird must have been a general favourite. The following names include all the principal changes in the word:—Derrycoogh, in Tipperary, is in Irish Doire-cuach, the oak-grove of the cuckoos; Cloncough, in Queen's county, the cuckoos' meadow. The word occurs in the gen. singular in Cloncoohy, in Fermanagh, the meadow of the cuckoo; and in Drumnacooha, in Longford, the cuckoo's ridge. It appears in the gen. plural with an eclipse (p. 21) in Knocknagough, in Tipperary, and Boleynagoagh, in Galway, the hill, and the dairy place, of the cuckoos. And it is still further softened down in Clontycoe, in Queen's county, and Clontycoo, in Cavan, the cuckoos' meadows; and in Ballynacoy, in Antrim, the town of the cuckoo.

The woodcock. Creabhar [crower] means a woodcock, and is in general easy to be distinguished in names, as it is usually made either -crou or -grou, the g taking the place of c in the latter, by eclipse (p. 21). Lackanagrour, near Bruree, in Limerick, is written in Irish, Leaca-na-gcreabhar, the hill-side of the woodcocks; Coolnagrower, in King's County and Tipperary, the woodcocks' corner.

The blackbird. The Irish word for a blackbird is lon or londubh, and the former is found, though not often, in names. The Four Masters mention a place in Tyrone, called Coill-na-lon, the wood of the blackbirds; and this same name occurs in Meath in the modernized form, Kilnalun.

The thrush. Smól or smólach [smole, smōlagh] is a thrush. The best known name containing the word is Glean-na-smól, the valley of the thrushes, the scene of a celebrated Irish poem, which is believed to be the same place as Glenasmole, a fine valley near Talaght, Dublin, where the river Dodder rises. Near Lifford, in Donegal, is a townland called Glensmoil, which represents the Irish Gleann-a'-smoil, the thrush's glen.

The sky lark. Fuiseóg [fwishoge] is a lark. It occurs in Rathnafushoge, in Carlow, the fort of the larks; in Knocknawhishoge, in Sligo, lark-hill; and in Kilnahushoge, near Clogher, in Tyrone, the wood of the larks.

Birds' nests. The word nead [nad] signifies a nest, and it is of very frequent occurrence in names, generally in the forms nad, ned, and nid. There are three townlands in Cavan, Fermanagh, and Derry, called Ned; Nedeen, little nest, is the name of the spot on which Kenmare stands, and the town itself is often called by that name. There are many high cliffs in mountainous districts, the resorts of eagles in times gone by, which still retain the name of Nadanuller, the eagle's nest, and they have in some cases given names to townlands, Nadnaveagh, in Roscommon, and Nadneagh, in King's County, signify—the first, the nest of the ravens, the second, of the raven. Athnid, the ford of the nest, is a parish in Tipperary; Drumnid is a townland near Mohill, in Leitrim, and there is another in the parish of Magheravally, Down, called Drumneth, both meaning the ridge of the nests.

CHAPTER VIII.

PLANTS.

AS with the animal world, so it is with the vegetable. All the principal native species of plants are commemorated in local names, from forest trees down to the smallest shrubs and grasses; and where cultivation has not interfered with the course of nature, there are still to be found many places, that to this day produce in great abundance, the very species that gave them names many hundreds of years ago.

Woods. All our histories, both native and English, concur in stating that Ireland formerly abounded in woods, which covered the country down to a comparatively recent period; and this statement is fully borne out by the vast numbers of names that are formed from words signifying woods and trees of various kinds. If a wood were now to spring up in every place bearing a name of this kind, the country would become once more clothed with an almost uninterrupted succession of forests.

There are several words in Irish for a wood, the principal of which are coill, and fidh. Coill is represented by various modern forms, the most common being kil and kyle; and as these also are the usual anglicised representatives of cill, a church, it is often difficult, and not unfrequently impossible, to distinguish them. Whether the syllables kil and kyle mean church or wood, we can ascertain only by hearing the names pronounced in Irish—for the sounds of cill and coill are quite distinct—or by finding them written in some Irish document of authority.

I have already conjectured (p. 289) that about a fifth of the kils and kills that begin names are woods: the following are a few examples:—Kilnamanagh, a barony in Tipperary, the ancient patrimony of the O'Dwyers, is called by the Four Masters, Coill-na-manach, the wood of the monks. The barony of Kilmore, near Charleville, in Cork, whose great forest was celebrated in the wars of Elizabeth, is called Coill-mhor, great wood, in the annals; but the vast majority of the Kilmores, of which there are about eighty—are from Cill-mór, great church. O'Meyey, who killed Hugh de Lacy at Durrow, fled, according to the Four Masters, “to the wood of Coill-an-chlair” (the wood of the plain); this wood is gone, but it was situated near Tullamore, and the place is still known by the name of Kilclare. The word Kyle, which very often stands for cill, in many cases also means a wood ; as in Kylemore (lake), great wood, near the Twelve Pins, in Connemara.

Coill assumes other forms, however, in which it is quite distinguishable from cill ; as in Barnacullia, a hamlet on the eastern face of the Three Rock Mountain, near Dublin, Barr-na-coille, the top of the wood ; and this wood is still in existence. The diminutive coillín gives names to several places, now called either in whole or part, Culleen ; and coillteán [kyletawn], which is sometimes applied to a growth of underwood, sometimes to a "little wood," is represented by Kyletaun, near Rathkeale, in Limerick.

The plural of coill is coillte [coiltha], which is often found in some of the Connaught counties in the forms of cuiltly, cuiltia, and cultia ; as in Cuiltlybo, in Mayo and Roscommon, the woods of the cows. In Clare there are some places called Quilty, which is the same word. But its most common form is kilty, except in Munster, where it is not much used ; this begins the names of about forty townlands, chiefly in the western and north-western counties, several, however, occurring in Longford. Coillidh [quilly] is a derivative of coill in common use to signify woodland ; it is found frequently in the form of cully—as, for example, Cullycapple, in Londonderry, the woodland of the horses ; and it is very often made Quilly, which is the name of some places in Derry, Waterford, and Down.

Fidh or fiodh [fih], the other term for wood, is found in both the Celtic and Teutonic languages. The old Irish form is fid, which glosses arbor in Sg. (Zeuss, p. 65) ; and it corresponds with the Gaulish vidu, Welsh guid, O. H. German witu, Ang.-Saxon vudu, English wood. Its most usual modern forms are fee, fi, and feigh; thus Feebane, white wood, near Monaghan; Feebeg and Feemore (little and great), near Borrisokane. At the mouth of the river Fergus, in Clare, there is an island called Feenish, a name shortened from Fidh-inis, woody island; we find the same name in the form of Finish, in Galway; while it is made Finnis in Cork and Down. The parish of Feighcullen, in Kildare, is mentioned by the Four Masters, who call it Fiodh-Chuilinn, Cullen's wood; and Fiddown in Kilkenny, they write Fidh-duin, the wood of the fortress.

Sometimes the aspirated d in the end is restored (p. 41), as we find in Fethard, a small town in Tipperary, which the annalists write Fiodh-ard, high wood, and there is also a village in Wexford of the same name. So also in Kilfithmone, in Tipperary, the church of the wood of the bog.

There are two baronies in Armagh, called Fewes, which are mentioned in the Four Masters at A. D. 1452, by the name of Feadha [Fā], i. e. woods; which is modernized by the adoption of the English plural form (p. 30); and Fewes, the name of a parish in Waterford, has the same origin. There was a district in Roscommon, west of Athlone, which in the annals is also called Feadha; but it is now commonly called The Faes (i. e. the woods) of Athlone.

This word has some derivatives, which also contribute to the formation of names. Fiodhach [feeagh] signifies a woody place, and all those townlands now called Feagh and Feeagh, which are found distributed over the four provinces, derive their names from it. Fiodhnach [Feenagh], which has exactly the same meaning, was the old name of Fenagh, in Leitrim (Four Masters); and though now bare of trees, it was wooded so late as the seventeenth century. There are several other places called Fenagh and Feenagh, which have the same original name. Feevagh, in Roscommon, is called in Irish, Fiodhbhach, which also signifies a place covered with wood.

Ros, as I have already stated (p. 402), has three meanings, one of which is a wood; and in this sense we often find it in names, especially in the south. New Ross, in Wexford, notwithstanding its name, is an old place; for Dermot Mac Murrough built a city there in the twelfth century, the ruins of which yet remain. It is called in the annals, Ros-mic-Treoin [Rosmictrone], the wood of Treun's son; the people still use this name corrupted to Rosemacrone; and they think the town was so called from a woman named Rose Macrone, about whom they tell a nonsensical story. St. Coman, from whom was named Roscommon (Coman's wood), founded a monastery there, and died, according the Four Masters, in 746 or 747, but other authorities place him much earlier. Ross Carbery, in Cork, was formerly a place of great ecclesiastical eminence; and it was "so famous for the crowds of students and monks flocking to it, that it was distinguished by the name of Ros-ailithir" [allihir], the wood of the pilgrims. Rusheen, a diminutive, and the plural Rusheens, are the names of a great many townlands in Munster and Connaught; the word is often applied to a growth of small bushy trees or underwood, as well as to a wood small in extent.

Fásach [faussagh], a very expressive word, derived from fás, growth, signifies a wilderness or an uncultivated place. It gives names to some townlands now called Fasagh and Fassagh; the territory along the river Dinin, in Kilkenny, which now forms a barony, is called Fassadinin, the wilderness of the Dinin : Fassaroe in Wicklow, red wilderness.

Scairt [scart], denotes a cluster of bushes, a thicket, a bushy place. In the form Scart, with the diminutive Scarteen, it gives names to numerous places, but only in the Munster counties and Kilkenny. Scartlea, grey thicket, is the name of a village in Cork, and of some townlands in Waterford and Kerry; Scartaglin, near Castleisland, the thicket of the glen.

Muine [munny], a brake or shrubbery. It occurs frequently in names, generally in the form of money, which constitutes or begins about 170 townland names through the four provinces. The word is also sometimes applied to a hill, so that its signification is occasionally doubtful. There are three townlands in Down called Moneydorrach, i. e. Muine-dorcha, dark shrubbery; Monivea, in Galway, is called in Irish authorities, Muine-an-mheadha, the shrubbery of the mead, very probably because the drink was brewed there.

The compound Liathmhuine [Leewinny], grey shrubbery, is often used to form names, and is variously modified; such as we see in Leaffony in Sligo, Leafin in Meath, Liafin and Lefin in Donegal, and Leighmoney in Cork.

Gaertha [gairha], is used in the south to denote a woodland along a river, overgrown with small trees, bushes, or underwood; it is almost confined to Cork and Kerry, and generally appears in the forms of Gearha and Gearagh; and occasionally Geeragh and Gairha. There is a well-known place of this kind near Macroon, where a dense growth of underwood extends for three or four miles along the Lee, and it is universally known by the name of Gearha. Tourists who have seen Coomiduff, near Killarney, will remember the Gearhameen river, which flows through it into the upper lake of Killarney; the postfix meen, Irish mín, signifies literally, smooth, fine, or small, indicating that this gearha was composed of a growth of small delicate bushes. There is also a Gearhameen west of Bantry, in Cork.

Garrán is a shrubbery. There are a great many places in Munster and Connaught called Gar-ran, Gárrane, and Garraun, all derived from this word. It is also found in Leinster, but not often, except in Kilkenny; and it occurs half-a-dozen times in Monaghan, but I have not found it elsewhere in Ulster.

The oak. We know as a historical fact, that this country formerly abounded in forests of oak, and that for many ages the timber continued to be exported to England; it appears to have been the most plentiful of all Irish trees, and we find it commemorated in local names to a greater extent than any other vegetable production.

Dair [dǎr], the common Irish word for oak, is found in many of the Indo-European languages; the Sansc. dru is a tree in general, which is probably the primary meaning, whence it came to signify "oak," which is the meaning of the Greek drus; Welsh dar; and Armoric derô.

The old Irish form of the word, as found in the Zeuss MSS., is daur, and this is preserved nearly in its purity in the name of the Daar, a little river flowing by Newcastle, in Limerick, which the people call Abhainn-na-dárach, the river of the oak. There is a place near Foynes in the Shannon, called Durnish, i. e. Dair-inis, oak island; which is also the original of Dernish, the name of three islands in Clare, Fermanagh, and Sligo.

The genitive of dair is darach or dara, which is very common in the end of names, in the forms of -darragh, -darra, and -dare. Adare, in Limerick, is always called in Irish documents, Ath-dara, the ford of the oak tree, a name which shows that a great oak must have for many generations shaded the ford, which in ancient times crossed the Maigue. There is a place of the same Irish name near Dromore, in Tyrone, but now called Aghadarragh. Darach, an adjective formation, signifies a place full of oaks; the ancient form is daurauch, which in the Zeuss MSS. glosses quercetum, i. e. an oak grove. It gives name to Darragh, a parish in the south-east of Limerick, where oaks still grow; and there are places of the same name in Down and Clare.

Doire or daire [derry] is an oak wood, and is almost always represented in anglicised names by derry or derri. The most ancient name of Londonderry, according to all our authorities, was Daire-Calgaich [Derry-Calgagh]; Adamnan, in one place, uses this name, and elsewhere he translates it Roboretum-Calgachi, the oak wood of Calgach. Calgach was a man's name common among the ancient Irish, signifying "fierce warrior;" and in the Latinized form of Galgacus, readers of Tacitus will recognise it, as the name of the hero who led the Caledonians at the battle of the Grampians.

Daire Calgaich was the old pagan name used for ages before St. Columba erected his monastery there in 546; it was retained till the tenth or eleventh century, when the name Derry-Columkille began to prevail, in memory of its great patron, and continued down till the time of James I., whose charter, granted to a company of London merchants, imposed the name "Londonderry."

We have several notices of the derry, or oak wood, that gave name to this place; we find it in existence more than 600 years after the time of St. Columba; for the Four Masters, at 1178, record:—"A violent wind-storm occurred this year; it caused a great destruction of trees. It prostrated oaks. It prostrated one hundred and twenty trees in Derry-Columkille."

The word doire is one of the most prolific roots in Irish names; and if we recollect that wherever it occurs an oak wood once flourished, we shall have a good idea of the great abundance of this tree in past ages. Over 1300 names begin with the word in its various forms, and there are innumerable places whose names contain it as a termination. Derreen, little oak wood, is also of very frequent occurrence, chiefly in Munster and Connaught, and occasionally in Leinster and Ulster.

There is yet another derivative of dair in pretty common use, namely dairbhre, which is now universally pronounced darrery, the aspirated b being wholly sunk. According to O'Reilly, it sometimes means an oak; but it is generally used to signify an oak forest, or a place abounding in oaks. Valentia island is well known in our ancient literature by the name of Dairbhre, as the principality of the great druid, Mogh-Ruith, who played so important a part at the siege of Knocklong (see p. 95). The island is now always called Darrery in Irish, by the people of Munster—a conclusive proof that the word darrery in the modern language, is identical with the ancient dairbhre.

There are two townlands in Galway, one in Cork, and one in Limerick called Darrery; Dorrery occurs near Carrick-on-Shannon; and this same form is preserved in Kildorrery, the church of the oaks, a village in the north of the county Cork, where the ruins of an old church are still to be seen. We have one notable example of the preservation of the full ancient pronunciation in Lough Derravara, in Westmeath, whose Irish name, as used in the annals, is Loch Dairbhreach, the lake of the oaks.

Ráil or rál [rawl] is another term for an oak, which we find used in the best authorities; and it often occurs in names, but nearly always in the genitive form, rálach [rawlagh]. Drumralla, near Newtown Butler, in Fermanagh, is written by the Four Masters, Druim-rálach, the ridge of the oak. There is a place in Queen's county called Ballinrally, the town of the oak; another near Athlone, called Cloonrollagh (meadow); and a third in Cork, called Ardrály (height). Ralaghan, the name of some townlands in Cavan and Monaghan; and Rallagh near Banagher, in Derry, both signify a place of oaks.

There is yet another word for an oak, namely omna, which is less frequently used than the others; and as it is not liable to corruption, it is plainly discernible when it occurs. It forms part of the name of Port-umna, a little town on the Galway side of the Shannon, which the Four Masters write Port-omna, the port or landing place of the oak; and it is also seen in Gort-nahomna, near Castlemartyr, in Cork, the field of the oak.

The ash. In the south and west of Ireland there are three names for the common ash—all modifications of the same original, viz.:—fuinnse, fuinnseann, and fuinnseóg [funsha, funshan, funshoge]; the last, which is the most modern, is almost universally used, and the others are nearly forgotten. In the north the f is omitted (see p. 26), and the word always employed is uinnseann [unshan].

The name of the river Funcheon, in Cork, the ash-producing river—preserves one of the old forms ; and we find it also in Funshin and Funshinagh, the names of several places in Connaught ; while the northern form appears in Unshinagh, and Inshinagh, which are common townland names :—all these mean land abounding in ash trees. Funchoge, which has the same signification, occurs in Wexford, and we find this form as far north as Louth ; while without the f, it becomes Unshog in the parish of Tynan, Armagh, and Hinchoge near Raheny, in Dublin.

The birch. Beith [beh], the birch tree ; cognate with the first syllable of the Latin betula, which is a diminutive. Great numbers of places have received their names from this tree ; and some of the most common derivatives are Beagh, Behagh, Bahagh, Behy, and Beaghy, which are all modifications of Beitheach, and Beithigh, birch land, and are found in every part of Ireland. We find several other places called Behanagh, Beheenagh, and Behernagh—all meaning a place abounding in birch. The village of Kilbeheny in Tipperary, near Mitchelstown, is called in the Four Masters, Coill-beithne, birch-wood ; and this interpretation is corroborated by the fact, that the place is situated at the point where the little river Behanagh (birch producing river) joins the Funcheon.

In the end of names, the word takes various forms, the most common of which is behy ; as we find in Ballaghbehy, in Limerick, and Ballaghna-behy, in Leitrim, the birchy road. Other forms are seen in the following :—the Irish name of Ballybay, in Monaghan, is Bél-atha-beithe [Bellabehy], the ford-mouth of the birch ; and they still show the ford, on which a few birches grow, or grew until recently, that gave name to the town. Aghavea, in Fermanagh, is always called in the annals, Achadh-beithe, birch-field, the same name as Aghaveagh, in Donegal and Tyrone. Coolavehy, near Ballyorgan in Limerick, the corner of the birch.

The elm. This tree is denoted by leamh [lav], which has relatives in several other languages, such as Latin ulmus, Ang.-Sax. ellm, Eng. elm, &c. The simple Irish form is hardly ever heard in the present spoken language, the diminutive leamhan [lavaun] being used in the south, and sleamhan [slavan] in the north. These words enter largely into names, and are subject to some curious transformations; but the most general recognizable forms are levan, leevan, and levaun, which are generally terminations, and signify abounding in elms.

The river Laune, flowing from the lower lake of Killarney, is called Leamhain in the Irish annals, i. e. the elm-river; and this is its Irish name at the present day, for the nasal sound of the aspirated m is distinctly heard. Leamhain [Lavin] is also the original name of the river Leven in Scotland, for so we find it written in Irish documents, such as the Irish version of Nennius, &c.; and the river has given name to the territory of Lennox, which is merely a modern corruption of its old name Leamhna (Reeves, Adamnan, p. 379).

An elm wood was called Leamhchoill [lavwhill], and this compound, subject to various alterations, exists at the present day, showing where these woods formerly flourished. The usual anglicised forms are Laughil, Loghill, and Loughill — the names of many places in the middle, south, and west of Ireland. But the most curious transformation is Longfield, (for which see p. 37): in Tyrone, near Lough Neagh, occurs a kind of metamorphic form in Magheralam-field, the plain of the elm wood.

The yew. Of all European trees, the yew is believed to attain the greatest age; there are several individual yews in England which are undoubtedly as old as the Christian era, and some are believed to be much older. We have some very old yews in Ireland also; one, for instance, at Clontarf, has probably reached the age of six or seven hundred years; and at the ruined castle of Aughnacore (field of the yews) near Oughterard, in Galway, there is yet to be seen one venerable solitary yew, the sole survivor of those that gave name to the place, which cannot be less than 1000 years old.

We have two words for the yew tree, evidently of the same origin, and both very common in names, viz. eó [ō or yō] and iubhar [oor or yure]. Eó is common to the Celtic, Teutonic, and Classical languages:—Low Lat. ivus, Fr. if, Welsh yw, Arm. ivin; Ang.-Sax. iv, Eng. yew. “As the yew is distinguished by its remarkable longevity, one may conjecture a connexion of the O. H. German iwa with ēwa eternity, Gr. aiōn, Lat. ævum, Goth. aivs” [Eng. age and ever] (Pictet, “Origines”). Cormac mac Cullenan made the same observation a thousand years ago in his Glossary, when he derived iubhar from eó ever, and barr top, “because it never loses its top; i. e. it is ever-green.”

In the seventh century, St. Colman, an Irish monk, having retired from the see of Lindisfarne, returned to his native country, and erected a monastery at a place called Magh-eó or Mageo (Bede), the plain of the yews, in which he settled a number of English monks whom he had brought over with him. For many ages afterwards, this monastery was constantly resorted to by monks from Britain, and hence it is generally called in the annals, Magheo-na-Saxan,

i. e. Mayo of the Saxons. The ruins of the old abbey still remain at the village; and from this place the county Mayo derives its name. Mayo is also the name of several other places, and in all cases, it has the same signification. There is a parish in Clare, taking its name from an old church, called in the annals Magh-neó, now Moyno, which is the same name as Mayo, only with the addition of the n of the old genitive plural. The word eó is very often represented by o or oe as a termination, as in Killoe, in Longford, Cill-eó (O'Cl. Cal.), the church of the yews; Gleno and Glano, yew glen.

The compound eóchaill [ōhill], signifying yew wood, in various modern forms gives name to a great many places. The best known is Youghal at the mouth of the Blackwater (Eochaill; Four Mast.), which was so called from an ancient yew wood that grew on the hill slope where the town now stands; and even yet some of the old yews remain there. The term is more common, however, in the form Oghill, which is the name of about twenty townlands in various counties. It occurs in Tipperary as Aughall, and in Derry as Aughil; the plural forms Oghilly, Oghly, and Aghilly, (yew woods), are found in Galway and Donegal; and the English plural, Aughils and Aghills in Kerry and Cork. Donohill, in Tipperary, the fortress of the yew wood.

The other term iubhar, is the word now used in the spoken language, and it is still more common in local nomenclature than eó. As a termination it occurs in the form of -ure, or with the article, -nure, in great numbers of names all over the country.

Newry, in Down, was anciently called Iubhar-cinn-tragha [Yure-kintraw], the yew tree at the head of the strand, of which the oldest form is found in the Leabhar na hUidhre, viz., Ibur-cind-trachta. It appears by a curious entry in the Four Masters to have derived its name from a tree planted by St. Patrick, and which continued to flourish for 700 years after him :—"A. D. 1162. The monastery of the monks at Iubhar-cinn-tragha was burned, with all its furniture and books, and also the yew which St. Patrick himself had planted." The tree must have been situated near the highest point to which the tide rises, for this is what the word ceann-tragha, strand-head, denotes. In after ages, the full name was shortened to Iubhar, which, by prefixing the article (p. 22), and making some other alterations, was reduced to the present name.

We have also other places called Newry; and the shortened form, Nure, is the name of several townlands. Uragh, a place abounding in yews, is sometimes met with, and the same name, by the attraction of the article (p. 22), becomes Newragh, which, in many cases, especially in the Leinster counties, is corrupted to Newrath.

The quicken tree. Caerthainn [cairhan or caurhan] is the Irish word for the quicken tree, mountain ash, or rowan tree. It enters into names very often, in the form Keeran, which is the name of several townlands; but it undergoes many other modifications, such as Keerhan, in Louth; Keeraun and Keerhaun, in Galway; Carhan, in Kerry; Kerane and Keraun, in Tipperary and King's County :—all these places must have produced this tree in abundance, for the names mean simply mountain ash. Drumkeeran, the ridge of the quicken tree, is the name of a village in Leitrim, of a parish in Fermanagh, and of several townlands in the northern counties.

The holly. This tree is denoted by Cuillionn [cuillion], which, as a root word, is very widely diffused over the country, and is, in general, very easily recognized. There are fifteen townlands, all in the Ulster counties, called Cullion, signifying holly or holly land; another form, Cullen, is the name of a parish in Cork, and of some townlands in other counties. Cullen, in Tipperary, is called by the Four Masters, Cuilleann-O-gCuanach [O-goonagh], from the old territory of Coonagh, to which it must have formerly belonged. This word enters into numerous compounds, but generally in the form cullen, as in Drumcullen, in King's County, Druim-cuillinn (Four Mast.), holly ridge. There are two derivatives, Cullenagh and Cullentragh, or Cullentra, which give names to about sixty townlands and villages; the former is more usual in the south, and the latter in the north; and both were originally applied to a place abounding in holly.

The hazel. This tree was formerly held in great estimation in Ireland: we are told that Mac Cuill (literally "son of the hazel"), one of the three last kings of the Tuatha De Dananns, was so called because he worshipped the hazel. When the old writers record, as they frequently do, that the country prospered under the benign rule of a good king, they usually state, as one of the indications of plenty, that the hazels bended with abundance of nuts; and the salmon that ate the nuts which fell from the nine hazel trees growing round certain great river fountains, became a "salmon of knowledge;" for whoever took and ate one of these fish, became immediately inspired with the spirit of poetry.

Coll is the Irish word for a hazel, corresponding with Lat. corylus. It is often difficult to distinguish the modern forms of this word from those of several others; in the beginning of names it is usually represented by coll, col, cole, cull, and cul, but some of these syllables are often of doubtful signification. Cullane and Cullaun, are the names of some townlands in Kilkenny and the Munster counties; Cullan occurs in Mayo; and Collon is a village and parish in Louth:—all these signify a place where hazels grow. Coll-choill [culhill], hazel wood, like leamhchoill (p. 449) is subject to considerable variations of form: as Cullahill, we find it in Tipperary and Queen's County; Colehill, in Donegal, King's County, Longford, and Meath; and Callowhill, in Fermanagh, Leitrim, Monaghan, and Wicklow.

As a termination, the word coll takes the different forms, -kyle, -quill, and -coyle, all representing the genitive, cuill: Barnakyle, near Mungret, in Limerick, and Barnacoyle, in Wicklow, hazel gap; Monaquill, in Tipperary, and Carnquill, in Monaghan, the bog and the carn of the hazel.

The alder. This tree is called fearn [farn] in Irish; but in the present spoken language the diminutive fearnóg [farnoge] is always used. The syllables farn and fern, which are found in names in every part of Ireland, denote the prevalence of this tree: thus we have several places called Farnagh, Fernagh, and Ferney, denoting a place producing alders; and Farnane and Farnoge are used in the same sense. Ferns, in Wexford, is well known in ecclesiastical and other records, by the name of Fearna—i. e. alders, or a place abounding in alders. Glenfarne, a valley near Manorhamilton, is called by the Four Masters Gleann-fearna, the alder glen. When the f is eclipsed (p. 22), the terminations, -navarn, -navern, -navarna, &c., are formed: Gortnavern, in Donegal, and Gortnavarnoge, in Tipperary, alder field; Lecknavarna, in Galway, the flagstone of the alders.

The celebrated territory of Farney, in Monaghan, is called Fearnmhagh in the Book of Rights and other Irish documents, which was softened down to the present form by the aspiration of the m and g. This name signifies alder plain; and even so late as the seventeenth century, the alder woods remained in considerable abundance (see Mr. E. P. Shirley's work on the barony of Farney).

The apple tree. Abhall or ubhall signifies both an apple and an apple tree:—pronounced owl or ool, and sometimes avel. The ancient Irish form, as found in the Zeuss MSS., is aball, which corresponds with the Arg.-Sax. appel, Eng. apple.

This word enters largely into local names, and very often assumes the forms, owl, ool, owle, &c. Aglowle, in Wicklow, is called in Irish documents, Acladh-abhla, the field of the apple trees; the same name is found in Fermanagh, in the slightly different form Aghyowle; and in Leitrim Aghyowla.

In many places, and especially in some parts of the north, the word abhall is used in the sense of "orchard;" as, for instance, in Avalreagh, in Monaghan, great orchard. Very much the same meaning has Ooh, on the Limerick and Waterford Railway, which preserves exactly the sound of the Irish name, Ubila, i. e. apple trees, or a place of apples.

The proper and usual word for an orchard, however, is abhalghort [oulart], literally apple-garden, which is of pretty frequent occurrence, subject to some variations of spelling. The most common forms are Oulart, the name of several places in Wexford; Ballinoulart, in Wexford and King's County, and Bal-lywhollart, in Down, both signify the town of the orchard. Another form appears in Knockullard, in Carlow, orchard hill; but Ullard, in Kilkenny, has a different origin.

The elder tree. The elder or boortree is called tromm or trom, gen. truim [trim]. The best known place named from this tree is Trim in Meath, which was so called from the elder trees that grew near the old ford across the Boyne: it is called in the Book of Armagh, Vadum-Truimm, a half translation of its Irish name, Ath-truim, the ford of the boortrees, of which only the latter part has been retained. We have numerous names terminating in -trim and -trine, which always represent the genitive of trom; Galtrim, in Meath, once a place of some importance, is called in the annals, Cala-truim, the callow or hdm of the elder; Gortvunatrime, near Emly, in Tipperary, the field of the bottom land, of the elder.

A place where elders grow is often called tromaire [trummera], from which Trummery, in Antrim, derives its name; it is shortened to Trummer, as the name of a little island in the Clare part of the Shannon; and in Wexford it takes the form of Trimmer. Tromán, a diminutive of tromm, meaning either the elder tree or a place producing elder, has given name to Tromau, in Roscommon, to Tromman, in Meth, and to Trumman, in Donegal.

The blackthorn. Draeighean [dreen] is the blackthorn or sloe-bush. The simple word gives names to several places in Antrim, Derry, and Tyrone, now called Dreen, Drain, and Drains, i. e. black-thorn. Drinan, near Kinsaley, in Dublin, is called Draighnen by the Four Masters, i. e. a place producing blackthorns. This diminutive form is much more common than the primitive, and in most parts of Ireland, the sloe-bush is called drinan, or drinan-donn (brown). It gives names to various places now called Dreenan, Drinane, and Drinaun. The adjective form, draeighneach, and its diminutive, draeighneachán, are also very common as townland names, in the modern forms, Dreenagh, Drinagh, Drinny, and Drinaghan — all meaning a place abounding in sloe-bushes.

The sloe is designated by the Irish word airne [arny], which is found pretty often in the end of names, in the form of -arney. For the original name of Killarney, in Kerry, we have not, as far as I am aware, any written authority; but I see no reason to question the opinion already advanced by others, that the Irish name is Cill-airneadh, the church of the sloes. This opinion is corroborated by the frequency of the same termination: thus we have a Killarney in Kilkenny, another in Roscommon, and a third near Bray, Wicklow. Near Clones, there is a townland called Magherarney, the plain of the sloes; Clonarney, in Westmeath and Cavan, sloe-meadow; Mullarney, in Kildare, the summit of the slows, &c.

The white thorn or haw tree—Irish, sceach [skagh]. From these thorn bushes, so plentifully diffused over the whole country, a vast number of places have received their names. There are numerous townlands called Skagh, Skea, and Skeagh, i. e. simply a thorn bush; and these, along with the shorter form, Ske, begin the names of many others, such as Skeagh-anore, in Cork, the bush of the gold, and Skenarget, in Tyrone, of the silver—both probably so called because the bushes marked the spots where the peasantry dreamed of, and dug for money.

As a termination, the word takes these same forms, in addition to several others, such as -ske, -skeha, -skehy, &c.; as in Gortnaskeagh, Gortnaskehy, and Gortnaskey, all which are the names of townlands, and signify the field of the white-thorns. There are some places in Donegal, Fermanagh, and Tyrone, called Skeoge, and we have several townlands with the name of Skeheen, both these signifying a little bush, or a little bushy brake. Skehanagh and Ska-hanagh, a bushy place, are the names of townlands in every part of Ireland, except Ulster.

The furze. Aiteann [attan] is our word for the furze; and it is found chiefly as a termination in two different forms, -attin, and -attina. The first is seen in Coolattin, the name of some places in Limerick, Wicklow, and Wexford, signifying the corner of the furze; and the second in Ballynahattina in Galway, the same as Ballynahatten in Down and Louth, and Ballinattin in Waterford and Tipperary, the town of the furze. The Irish scholar will remark that in these names the word is used in the masculine in the south, and in the feminine in the north and west; and I may remark here, once for all, that I have also observed this difference of gender inflexion according to locality, in case of the names of some other natural productions.

The heath. The common heath—erica vulgaris—is denoted by the word fraech; as may be expected, it enters extensively into names, and oftener as a termination than otherwise. In the beginning of names, where it occurs in the nominative, it is usually represented by freagh and freugh; thus Freaghillaun is the name of several little islands round various parts of the coast, signifying heathy island; Freaghmore, in Westmeath, and Freughmore in Tyrone, great heath. We find, however, Freeduff—black heath—in Armagh and Cavan, the same as Freaghduff in Tipperary.

As a termination, it takes the form -free, which exactly represents the pronunciation of the genitive, fraeigh. Inishfree, a little island in Lough Gill, is called by the Four Masters, Inisfraeich, heathy island; and there are islands of the same name off the coast of Donegal, and elsewhere. Coolfree, heathy corner, is a townland near Ballyorgan in Limerick. When the article is used, the f disappears by aspiration (p. 20), and the word becomes -ree; but then this syllable is often also the modern form of righ, a king:—thus Ballinree, which is the name of about a dozen townlands, might represent either Baile-an-righ, the town of the king, or Baile-an-fhraeigh, of the heather.

The diminutives fraechán and fraechóg—but principally the former—are used to denote the bilberry, or whortleberry, or “hurt,” as it is called over a great part of Munster, a contraction of “hurtle” or “whortle.” In other parts of Ireland, these berries get their proper Irish name, and the citizens of Dublin are well accustomed to see “froghans” exposed for sale in baskets, by women who pick them on the neighbouring hills. Freahanes and Frehans, i. e. whortleberries, are the names of two townlands, one near Ross Carberry, the other in Tipperary; and by a change of ch to f (p. 49), it becomes Freffans in Meath. On the northern side of Seefin mountain, over Glenosheen, in Limerick, there is a deep glen called Lyrenafreaghaun, which represents the Irish Ladhar-na-bhfraechán, the river-branch of the whortleberries; and it produces them as plentifully to-day as when it got the name. Kilnafrehan in Waterford, and Kylefreaghane in Tipperary, bilberry wood; Binnafreaghan in Tyrone, the peak of the whortleberries.

The ivy. The different kinds of ivy are denoted by the term eidhneán [ine-aun], which is a diminutive of the older form eideann [eyon]. In its simple form it gives name to Inan in Meath, and to Inane in Cork and Tipperary, both meaning an ivy-covered place. The adjective form eidhneach [inagh], abounding in ivy, is, however, much more common, and it occurs in MSS. of authority. There is a river in Clare, called Inagh, from which a parish takes name, and also a river in Donegal, flowing into Inver Bay, called Eany (which gives name to Gleneany, through which it flows), both of which the Four Masters mention by the name of Eidhneach, i. e. the ivy-producing river.

A tree. The common word for a tree is crann, and it has retained this form unchanged from the earliest ages, for crann occurs in the Zeuss MSS. as a gloss on arbor. This word forms part of the names of many places, in every one of which there must have once stood a remarkable tree, and for a time sufficiently long to impress the name.

In the nominative, it generally takes the forms Crann and Cran, which are the names of townlands in Armagh, Cavan, and Fermanagh; and constitute the beginning of many names, such as Crandaniel in Wexford, Daniel's tree; Crancam in Roscommon and Longford, crooked tree; Cranlome in Tyrone, bare tree; Cranacrower, in Wexford, the woodcocks' tree.

The genitive case, crainn is usually pronounced crin or creen, and the form is accordingly modified when it occurs as a termination: Crossmacrin in Galway, is written in Irish, Cross-maighe-crainn, the cross of the plain of the tree; Drominacreen in Limerick, the little hill of the tree; Corcraín in Armagh, the round hill of the tree. With the c eclipsed, the termination is usually -nagran, as in Ballynagran, a common townland name, Baile-na-gcrann, the town of the trees. The adjective crannach signifies arboreous—a place full of trees; and from this a great many townlands and rivers, now called Crannagh, have received their names.

Bile [billa] signifies a large tree; it seems connected with Sanscr. bala, a leaf, the more so as bileóg, the diminutive of the Irish word, also denotes a leaf. Bile was generally applied to a large tree, which, for any reason, was held in veneration by the people; for instance one under which their chiefs used to be inaugurated, or periodical games celebrated.

Trees of this kind were regarded with intense reverence and affection; one of the greatest triumphs that a tribe could achieve over their enemies, was to cut down their inauguration tree, and no outrage was more keenly resented, or when possible, visited with sharper retribution. Our annals often record their destruction as events of importance; at 981 for example, we read in the Four Masters, that the bile of Magh-adhar [ire] in Clare—the great tree under which the O'Briens were inaugurated—was rooted out of the earth and cut up, by Malachy, King of Ireland; and at 1111, the Ulidians led an army to Tullaghoge, the inauguration place of the O'Neills, and cut down the old trees; for which Niall O'Loughlin afterwards exacted a retribution of 3000 cows.

These trees were pretty common in past times; some of them remain to this day, and are often called Bell trees, or Bellow trees, an echo of the old word bile. In most cases, however, they have long since disappeared, but their names remain on many places to attest their former existence. The word bile would be correctly anglicised billa, as we find it in Lisnabilla, in Antrim, the fort of the ancient tree.

As a termination it assumes several forms; and it is in some places used in the masculine, and in others in the feminine (see p. 458). It is very often made -villa, in which case it is likely to be mistaken for the English word villa. The well-known song "Lovely Kate of Garnavilla," will be in the recollection of many people; the home of the celebrated beauty lies near the town of Cahir, in Tipperary, and its Irish name is Garran-a'-bhile, the shrubbery of the ancient tree. At Rathvilly, in Carlow, one of these trees must have, at some former time, flourished on an ancient fort, for it is written by the annalists, Rath-bile; and in the King's County, there is a place of the same name, but spelled Rathvilla.

In some parts of Ireland, especially in the south, the word is pronounced bella, as if spelled beile, and this form is perpetuated in the names of many places; for instance Bellia, a village in Clare, and Bellew, in Meath; Ballinvella, in Waterford, the town of the old tree, the same as Ballinvilla, the name of places in various counties.

Craebh [crave] signifies either a branch or a large wide-spreading tree. This name, like bile, was given to large trees, under whose shadow games or religious rites were celebrated, or chiefs inaugurated; and we may conclude that one of these trees formerly grew wherever we find the word perpetuated in a name. Creeve, the most usual modern form, is the name of a great many places. There is a parish in Limerick called Crecora, an uncommonly pretty name when restored to its original form:—O'Heeren calls it Craebh-cumhraidhe [crave-coory], which signifies the sweet-scented branchy tree.

In several cases, the bh is represented by w, changing the word to Crew, which is the name of ten or twelve places in the northern counties. Crewhill, in Kildare, is merely the phonetic representation of Craebh-choill, branchy wood, or a wood of branchy trees; and Loughcrew, a small lake in Meath, giving name to a parish, is called in Irish, Loch-craeibhe, the lake of the branchy tree. There are more than thirty townlands called Creevagh, i. e. branchy or bushy land; and Creevy, which is a modification of the same word, is the name of about twenty others. Near the town of Antrim, is a townland called Creevery, and another in Donegal, called Creevary; both of which are from the Irish, Craebhaire, a branchy place.

CHAPTER IX.

SHAPE AND POSITION.

A REAL or fancied resemblance to different parts of the human body, has originated a great variety of topographical names all over the country. Most of the bodily members have been turned to account in this manner; and the natural features compared with, and named from, them, are generally, but not always, hills.

The head. The word ceann [can], a head, is used much in the same way as the English word, to denote the head, front, or highest part of anything; and it commonly appears in anglicised names, in the forms can, ken, kin. There is a place near Callan in Kilkenny, called Cannafahy, whose Irish name is Ceanna-faithche, the head of the exercise-green; Kincon, in Mayo and Armagh, the hound's head, so called from some peculiarity of shape; Kinard, high head or hill; Kinturk, the head or hill of the boar.

The highest point reached by the tide in a river, was sometimes designated by the term ceann-mara, i. e. the head of the sea; from a spot of this kind on the river Roughty, the town of Kenmare, in Kerry, received its name; and Kinvarra, in Galway, originated in the same way, for the Four Masters call it Ceannmhara. Another compound, ceannsaile [can-saully], also used to express the same idea, means literally the head of the brine, and from this we have the name of Kinsale, in Cork, of Kinsalebeg, in Waterford (beg, little, to distinguish it from the preceding), and of Kinsaley, a parish north of Dublin.

The forehead is denoted in Irish, by the word eudan [edan], which is used topographically to signify a hill brow. There is a small town in King's County, another in Antrim, and half a dozen townlands in several counties, called Edenderry; all of which are from the Irish, Eudan-daire, the hill brow of the oak wood. This word, Eden—always with the same meaning—is much used in the northern and north-western counties in local nomenclature; it is itself the name of about a dozen places; and it forms the beginning of more than 100 other names. It is occasionally contracted; as in Ednego, near Dromore, in Down, Eudan-a'-ghobha, the smith's hill; Ednashanlaght, in Tyrone, the hill brow of the old sepulchre.

The nose. Srón [srone], the nose, is often applied to prominent points of hills, or abrupt promontories; and in this sense we sometimes find it in townland names; as in Sroankeeragh, in Roscommon, the sheep's nose; Shronebeha, in Cork, the nose or point of the birch.

The throat. The word braghad [braud], which literally signifies the gullet or windpipe, is locally applied to a gorge or deeply-cut glen; and of this application, the river and valley of the Braid near Ballymena, in Antrim, form a very characteristic example. The diminutive Bradoge, little gorge, is the name of the small stream flowing by Grangegorman into the Liffey on the north side of Dublin; and the same word gives name to a townland in Monaghan, now called Braddocks. Scórnach is another term for the windpipe, and in one instance it is applied to a remarkable glen cut through the hills near Tallaght in Dublin, now called the gap of Ballinascorney, i. e. the own of the gorge.

The shoulder. Guala or gualann [goola, goolan] signifies the shoulder, and was often applied to a hill. The village of Shanagolden in Limerick, is called in Irish authorities, Seangualann, old shoulder or hill, and this is also the Irish name still in use.

The back. The literal meaning of the word druim [drum] is a back, exactly the same as the Latin dorsum, with which it is also cognate. In its local application, it signifies a long low hill or ridge; and in this sense also, it is often translated by dorsum. It is one of the most common of all root words in Irish names; its most usual anglicised forms are drum, drom, and drim; and these syllables begin about 2400 names of townlands, towns, and villages, besides the countless names that contain this very prolific root otherwise combined. In Munster it is very generally pronounced droum, and in many names it is modernized accordingly.

There are several places in the southern and western counties, called Dromada, and Dromadda, the Irish name of which is Druim-fhada, long ridge, the sound of f being wholly sunk by aspiration (p. 20); in some of the northern counties the f is retained, and the name becomes Drumfad. Drumagh, in Queen's County, Drimagh, in Wexford, and Dromagh, in Cork, signify ridged land, a place full of drums or ridges.

In many combinations of this word, the d sound is lost by aspiration. Aughrim, near Ballinasloe in Galway, the scene of the battle of 1691, has its name formed in this way; it is called in Irish authorities, Each-dhruim, which Colgan translates equi-mons, i. e. horse-hill, and the pronunciation of the ancient name is well preserved in the modern. There are, besides this, about twenty Aughrims in Ireland. Sometimes the d sound is changed to that of t, as in Leitrim, the name of one of the counties, and of more than forty townlands scattered over Ireland: — Liath-dhruim (Four Masters), grey ridge.

The diminutive, Druimín [Drimmeen], has given names to various places now called Drimeen, Dromeen, and Drummeen. Dromainn [drumin], which is, perhaps a diminutive, also means a ridge, much the same as druim itself, and this word is the original of all those places called Dromin, Drummin, and Drummans; in the northern counties it is often corrupted to Drummond (p. 56), which is the name of about twenty townlands. Another development of druim is druimneach or druimne, meaning ridges or ridged land, originating a new growth of names. For example, Drimnagh castle and parish, three miles south-west of Dublin, took the name from the little sand-ridges now called the Green Hills. Drimna, Dromnagh, and Drumina, the names of places in various parts of Ireland, are all different forms of this word.

The Irish word tón [thone] signifies the backside, exactly the same as the Latin podex. It was very often used to designate hills, and also low-lying or bottom lands; and it usually retains the original form, ton; as we see in Tonduff, Tonbaun, and Tonroe, black, white, and red, backside, respectively; Toneel, in Fermanagh, the bottom land of the lime.

One particular compound, Ton-le-gaeith, which literally signifies "backside to the wind," seems to have been a favourite term; for there are a great many hills all through the country with this name, which are now called Tonlegee. Sometimes the preposition re is used instead of le—both having the same meaning—and the name in this case becomes Tonregee. In this last, a d is often inserted after the n (p. 55), and this, with one or two other trifling changes, has developed the form Tanderagee, the name of a little town in Armagh, and of ten townlands, all in the Ulster counties, except one in Meath, and one in Kildare.

The side:—Irish taebh [teev]. This, like the corresponding English word, is applied to the side of a hill; and its usual anglicised forms are tieve and teev. Tievenavarnoge, in Fermanagh, represents the Irish, Taebh-na-bhfearnog, the hill side of the alders; Teev-nabinnia, in Mayo, the side of the pinnacle.

The thigh. The word más [mauce] the thigh, is locally applied to a long low hill. It gives name to several places in the western counties, now called Mace; Masreagh in Sligo, Massreagh in Donegal, and Mausrevagh in Galway, grey hill: Mausrower in Kerry, fat or thick hill. There is a castle near Antrim town, called Massereene, giving name to two baronies; this name, which originally belonged to a small friary of Franciscans, founded about the year 1500 by one of the O'Neills, is written in O'Mellan's Journal of Phelim O'Neill, Masareghna, which is little different from the correct Irish form, Más-a'-rioghna, the queen's hill (Reeves, Eccl. Ant., p. 389).

The shin:—Irish, lurga or lurgan. This word, like the last, was often applied to a long low ridge. From the first form, some townlands, chiefly in the south, are called Lurraga. The second form was much used in the northern and western counties, in which there are about thirty places called Lurgan, and more than sixty others of whose names it forms a part.

The foot. The word cos [cuss], a foot, is used locally to express the foot, or bottom, or lower end of any thing; the form found in anglicised names is generally cush, which represents, not the nominative but the dative (cois, pron. cush), of the original word, (p. 31). Cush and Cuss, i. e. foot, are the names of some places in the middle and southern counties. Cushendun, in Antrim, is called by the Four Masters, Bun-abhann-Duine, the foot, i. e. the mouth, of the river Dun; this was afterwards changed to Cos-abhann-Duine [Cuss-oun-dunny], which has the same meaning, and which has been gradually compressed into the present name. Cushendall was in like manner contracted from Cos-abhann-Dhalla, the foot or termination of the river Dall (Reeves, Eccl. Ant., pp. 83, 283). In the Ordnance Memoir of the parish of Templemore (p. 213), it is conjectured that the stream which flows by Coshquin near Londonderry, was anciently called Caein [keen], i. e. beautiful; whence the place got the name of Cois-Caeine, the end of the river Caein, now shortened to Coshquin.

The barony of Coshlea in Limerick, was so called from its position with respect to the Galty mountains, its Irish name being Cois-sleibhe [Cushleva], i. e. (at) the foot of the mountain; and this signification is still preserved in the name of a place, now called Mountain-foot, situated at the base of this fine range; Sometimes the word cois (which is in this case a remnant of the compound preposition, a-gcois or a-cois), is used to express contiguity or nearness; in this sense it appears in the name of the barony of Coshma in Limerick, Cois-Maighe, (the district) near or along the river Maigue; and in that of Coshbride in Waterford, the territory by the river Bride.

Besides the names enumerated in the preceding part of this chapter, many others are derived from their resemblance to various objects, natural or artificial; and many from their position, or from their direction with respect to other places. Of these, the following will be a sufficient specimen.

Bun means the bottom or end of anything; Buntalloon, near Tralee, represents perfectly the pronunciation of the Irish, Bun-talmhan, the end of the earth or land: Bunlahy, in Longford, the end of the lahagh or slow. It is very often applied to the end, that is, the mouth of a river, and many places situated at river mouths have in this manner received their names; as Buncrana in Donegal, the mouth of the river Crana; Bunratty in Clare, the mouth of the river, formerly called the Ratty, but now the Owen Ogarney, because it flows through the ancient territory of the O'Carneys.

Bárr [baur] is the top of anything. Barmona in Wexford, the top of the bog; Barravore in Wicklow, great top; Barmeen in Antrim, smooth top: Barreragh, in Cork, western top. In some of the northern counties, the barr of a townland means the high or hilly part; and from this we derive such names as the Barr of Slawin in Fermanagh, i. e. the top or highest part of the townland of Slawin.

Uachdar [oughter], the top: as an adjective, it signifies upper. Lough Oughter in Cavan (upper lake), was so called from its position with regard to Lough Erne; Oughterard, the name of a town in Galway, of a parish in Kildare, and of several townlands, Uachdar-ard (Four Masters), upper height. In the north it is sometimes corrupted to water, as in Wateresk, in Down, the upper esk or stream-channel (see also p. 38); and sometimes to Witter, which is the name of a parish in Down, an abbreviation of Grange Oughter, Upper Grange.

lochdar [eighter] is the opposite of uachdar, and signifies the bottom or lower part; Eighter Island in Donegal, lower island; Killeighter, Killeter, and Killetra, lower church or wood; Eighterard Galway, so called to distinguish it from Oughterard, near which it is situated.

Gabhal [goul, gowal, and gole], a fork; old Irish gabul, from the verb gab to take. It is a word in very extensive local use in every part of Ireland, being generally, though not always, applied to river forks; and it assumes a variety of forms, in accordance with different modes of pronunciation. The simple word is seen in such names as Gole, Gowel, and Goul; and the plural Gola (forks) is pretty common in the northern counties.

The land enclosed by two branches of a river was often designated by the compound Eadar-dha-ghabhal [Adragoul], or Eadar-ghabhal [Addergoul], i. e. (a place) between two (river) prongs; and this has given names to many places, in the various forms, Addergoole, Adderagool, Addrigoole, Adrigole, Adrigool, Edergole, and Edergoole.

The diminutives are still more widely spread than the original; and they give names to those places called Golan, Goleen, Goulaun, Gowlan, Gowlane, and Gowlaun, all signifying a little fork, commonly a fork formed by rivers. At the village of Golden in Tipperary, the river Suir divides for a short distance, and encloses a small island; this little bifurcation was, and is still, called in Irish, Gabhailin [gouleen], which has been corrupted to the present name of the village, Golden.

In some parts of the south, this word is pronounced gyle, and hence we have Gyleen, the name of a village near Trabolgan, just outside Cork harbour. There are two conical mountains a little west of Glengariff in Cork, between which ran the old road to Castle-town Bearhaven; they stand up somewhat like the prongs of a fork, and hence they are called Goulmore and Goulbeg, great and little fork; but the former is now better known by the name of Sugarloaf. This very remarkable mountain is also often called Sliabh-na-gaibhle, the mountain of the fork, which is pronounced Slieve-na-goila; and many people now believe that this signifies the mountain of the wild men!

Another word for a fork is ladhar [lyre in the south, lear in the north], which is also much used in forming names, and like gabhal, is applied to a fork formed by streams or glens. There are many places in the south called Lyre, and others in the north called Lear, both of which are anglicised forms of this word; and the diminutives Lyreen, Lyrane, and Lyranes (little river forks), are the names of some places in Cork, Kerry, and Waterford. Near Inchi-geela in Cork, there is a townland called, from its exposed situation, Lyrenageeha, the fork of the wind; Lyranearla in Waterford, near Clonmel, the earl's river-fork. On the southern side of Seefin mountain, three miles south of Kilfinnane in Limerick, is a bright little valley traversed by a sparkling streamlet; which, from its warm, sunny aspect, is called Lyrenagreana, in Irish Ladhar-na-greine, the river-branch of the sun.

Cúil [cooil] is a corner or angle ; it is very extensively used in forming local names, generally in the forms of cool and cole, but it is often difficult to tell whether these syllables, especially the first, represent cúil, a corner, or cúl [cool], a back. There is a place in King's County called Coleraine; Coolrain is the name of a village and of some townlands in Queen's County; and we find Coolrainey in Wexford, Coolrahee near Askeaton, and Coleraine near Limerick city. All these names are originally the same as that of Coleraine in Londonderry, which is explained in an interesting passage in the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick. When the saint, in his journey through the north, arrived in this neighbourhood, he was received with great honour, and hospitably entertained, by a chieftain named Nadslua, who also offered him a piece of ground on which to build a church. And when the saint inquired where the place was, it was pointed out to him on the bank of the river Bann: it was a spot overgrown with ferns; and some boys were at the moment, amusing themselves by setting them on fire. From this circumstance the place received the name of Cuil-rathain [Coolrahen], translated by Colgan, Secessus filicis, the corner of the ferns, which it retains to this day, with very little alteration.

INDEX OF NAMES.

N. B.—Many names that do not occur in the body of the work are explained in this Index.

	PAGE		PAGE
ABBEYFEALE,	155	Aghabulloge; the field of the bullocks.
Abbeygormacan; in Irish, Mainistir Ua gCormacain , the abbey of the O'Cor-macans.		Aghacrew in Tipperary; Ath-a'-cru , the ford of the blood.
Abbeylara,	285	Aghacross,	301
Abbeyleix,	119	Aghada near Cork; Ath-fhada , long ford.
Abbeyshrule,	412	Aghadachor,	237
Abbeystowry,	412	Aghdark,	397
Achonry,	214	Agbdarra,	445
Aclare in Sligo; Irish, Ath-an-chlair , the ford of the plain.		Aghadaugh	238
Adare,	445	Aghadavoyle,	238
Addergoole, Addragool, Ad-drigoole,	470	Aghaderg; red ford.
Aderavoher,	232	Aghaderry; the field of the oak wood.
Aderrig near Dublin; Ath-dearg , red ford.		Aghadoe,	232
Adrigole, Adrigoole,	470	Aghadowey in Derry; Achadh-Dubhthaigh (O'C. Cal.), Duffy's field.
Affane,	326	Aghadown; the field of the dun or fort.
Agha,	213	Aghadreenagh, Aghadreen-an; the field of the sloe-bushes.
Aghabeg; little field.		Aghagower,	68
Aghaboe,	422
Aghaboy; yellow field.
Aghabrack; speckled field.

	PAGE		PAGE
Aghalee,	214	Ahaun ; little ford.
Aghalurcher; Achadh-ur-chair (Four Mast.), the field of the cast (see p. 156).		Aille,	372
Aghamacart,	214	Aillenaveagh,	27
Aghamore; great field.		Allagower,	372
Aghanloo,	327	Alleen, Alleen Hogan, Alleen Ryan,	372
Aghatubrid ; the field of the spring.		Allen, Hill of,	84
Aghavannagh,	350	Allow river,	385
Aghavea,	448	Alt,	353
Aghaveagh,	449	Altachullion,	354
Aghavilla, Aghaville, Aghavilly ; the field of the bilé or old tree.		Altan,	354
Aghaviller,	46, 48	Altanagh,	354
Aghawoney,	214	Altans,	354
Aghinagh ; field of the ivy.		Altaturk ; the glen side of the boar.
Aghindaiagh,	237	Altavilla,	354
Aghindarragh ; field of the oak.		Altinure,	354
Aghintain,	175	Altmore ; great glen-side.
Aghintamy,	214	Altnaveagh,	22
Aghinver,	214	Altore,	111
Aghmacart,	214	Alts,	353
Aghnahily,	372	Anna,	415
Aghnamullen in Monaghan ; the field of the mills.		Annabella,	415
Aghnaskea, Aghnaskeagh, Aghnaskew ; the field of white thorns.		Annaclone ; Eanach-cluana , the marsh of the meadow.
Aghowle,	455	Annacotty,	209
Aghyowla,	455	Annacramph,	58
Aghyowle,	455	Annaduff,	415
Aglish,	291	Annagassan,	341
Aglishcloghane,	291	Annagh,	415
Aglishcormick,	291	Annaghaskin,	415
Aglishdrinagh,	292	Annaghbeg ; little marsh.
Agolagh,	41	Annaghmore ; great marsh.
Ahabeg,	27	Annahagh,	345
Ahagaltaun,	161	Annahaia,	345
Ahane,	327	Annahavil ; the marsh of the orchard.
Ahanure ; the ford of the yew.		Annahilt,	427
Ahaphuca,	176	Annakisha,	332
Ahascragh,	367	Annalong in Down ; Ath-na-long , the ford of the ships.
		Annamoe,	423
		Annayalla,	19
		Anny,	415
		Annyalty,	415

	PAGE		PAGE
Anveyerg,	22	Ardlougher; rushy height.
Aran island,	137	Ardmayle in Tipperary; Ard-Maillë (Four Mast.), Malley's height.
Arboe,	422	Ardmeen; smooth height.
Ardagh,	214	Ardmore,	353
Ardaghy,	214	Ardmulchan in Meath; Ard - Maelchon (Four Masters), Maelchon's height.
Ardan,	353	Ardnacroh,	204
Ardanaffrin,	110	Ardnacrusa, Ardnacrushy; the height of the cross.
Ardane,	353	Ardnagassan, Ardnagassane,	341
Ardaneaning,	191	Ardnageeha, Ardnageehy; the height of the wind.
Ardanreagh,	353	Ardnagroghery,	205
Ardara,	254	Ardnamoghill,	195
Ardataggle, Ardateggle; the height of the rye.		Ardnaneane,	433
Ardatrave,	336	Ardnapreaghaun,	434
Ardaun,	353	Ardnarea,	96
Ardavagga,	196	Ardnurcher,	157
Ardbane, Ardbaun; white height.		Ardpatrick; St. Patrick's height.
Ardbeg,	353	Ardrahan; ferny height.
Ardbraccan,	136	Ardraly,	447
Ardcarn; the height of the carn .		Ardskeagh; bushy height.
Ardcath,	107	Ardsollus,	202
Ardee,	118	Ardstraw,	55
Ardeelan; Ard-fhaeilan , the height of the sea- gulls.		Ardvally,	19
Ardeen,	353	Ardvarna, Ardvarness, . . .	394
Ardeevin; Ard-aeibhinn , beautiful height.		Ardvarney,	394
Ardelly,	271	Ardvone,	420
Ardfert,	138	Argyle,	80
Ardfinan,	144	Arklow,	99
Ardgeeha; windy height.		Arless in Queen's County; Ard-lios , high fort.
Ardgivna,	206	Armagh,	71
Ardglass,	353	Armoy in Antrim; Air- thir-Maighe [Arher-moy; Four Masters], eastern plain.
Ardglushin,	411	Artrea in Derry; Ard-Trea (Mart. Taml.), Trea's height. The virgin St. Trea, 5th cent.
Ardgoul in Limerick; high fork.
Ardgraigne,	324
Ardgregane,	324
Ardinawark,	198
Ardingary,	196
Ardkeen,	353
Ardkeenagh; mossy hill.
Ardkill; high church or wood.

	PAGE		PAGE
Askeaton,	68	Bahagh,	448
Assaroe,	171	Bahana; birch land.
Assey,	327	Bailey lighthouse,	319
Assolus,	203	Balbriggan,	321
Athenry,	41	Baldoyle,	321
Athgoe,	206	Balfeddock,	435
Athlacca,	326	Balgeeth,	41
Athleague,	326	Balief,	50
Athlone,	325	Balla,	68
Athlunkard,	277	Ballagh,	340
Athneasy in Limerick; Bel- atha-na-nDeise [Bellana- neasy; Four Mast.], the ford of the Desii; from the old territory of Deis- beag.		Ballaghaderreen,	340
Athnid,	438	Ballaghbehy,	448
Athnowen,	399	Ballaghboy,	340
Athy,	120	Ballaghkeen,	340
Attanagh; a furzy place.		Ballaghkeeran,	340
Atshanbo,	278	Ballaghmoone,	340
Attatantee,	278	Ballaghmore,	340
Attavally,	278	Ballaghna-behy,	448
Attidavock,	238	Ballaghoge,	195
Attidermot,	278	Ballahantouragh,	272
Attiduff,	278	Ballard; high town.
Attykit,	278	Ballee,	327
Aughadanove,	238	Balleen,	322
Aughagallon,	315	Ballina,	96, 329
Aughall,	451	Ballinaboy; Bel-an-atha- buidhe , mouth of the yellow ford.
Aughil,	451	Ballinaclogh,	375
Aughils,	451	Ballinacor,	336
Aughinish,	425	Ballinacur,	336
Aghnacloy,	375	Ballinacurra,	336
Aughnagomaun,	199	Ballinafad,	329
Aughnahoy,	345	Ballinagar; Bel-atha-na- gcarr , the ford-mouth of the cars.
Aughnanure,	450	Ballinahinch,	321
Aughnish,	425	Ballinakill; the town of the church or wood.
Aughrim,	466	Ballinalack,	380
Aughsullish stream,	203	Ballinallee,	423
Aughvolysane,	221	Ballinamara,	107
Avalbane,	29	Ballinamona; the town of the bog.
Avalreagh,	455	Ballinamore,	329
Awbeg river,	410	Ballinamought near Cork; town of the poor people.
Ayle,	372
Ayleacotty,	372

	PAGE		PAGE
Ballinard; the town of the height.		Ballingayrou,	436
Ballinascarty; the town of the thicket.		Ballingeary,	67
Ballinascorney,	465	Ballinglanna, Ballinglen; the town of the glen.
Ballinaskelligs bay,	383	Ballingowan,	206
Ballinasloe,	193	Ballinguile,	91
Ballinaspick, Ballinaspig; the town of the bishop.		Balliniska,	404
Ballinastraw; the town of the river-holm.		Ballinla,	357
Ballinattin,	458	Ballinlass, Ballinlassa, Ballinlassy,	251
Ballinchalla; the town of the callow or marshy meadow.		Ballinlig, Ballinlug, Ballinluig; the town of the lug or hollow.
Ballinclare,	388	Ballinliss,	251
Ballincloghan; the town of the stepping-stones.		Ballinlough,	405
Ballincollig,	30	Ballinlyna; the town of the Leinsterman.
Ballincurra,	321	Ballinoran,	409
Ballincurrig,	321	Ballinoulart,	455
Pallincurry,	321	Ballinphuill, Ballinphull; the town of the hole.
Ballincuslane; the town of the castle.		Ballinrally,	447
Ballindaggan,	283	Ballinree,	459
Ballindagny,	283	Ballinrink,	197
Ballindangan,	283	Ballinrobe,	321
Ballinderry,	322	Ballinrostig in Co. Cork; Roche's town.
Ballindine,	283	Ballinspittle in Cork; the town of the spital or hospital.
Ballindinis, Ballindinas; the town of the black island.		Ballintaggart,	22
Ballindollaghan,	180	Ballintannig,	30
Ballindoolin,	334	Ballintarsna; cross town.
Ballindrait,	145, 337	Ballinteean,	174
Ballindrehid,	337	Ballinteer,	208
Ballineanig,	191	Ballinteosig in Co. Cork; Joyce's town.
Ballineddan,	413	Ballinteskin,	417
Ballinenagh,	191	Ballintine,	175
Ballinfoyle,	20	Ballintlea,	343
Ballingaddy in Limerick; the town of the thief, i. e. the Black thief, O'Dwane.		Ballintleva, Ballintlevy, . .	348
Ballingarrane; the town of the shrubbery.		Ballinthieve,	348
Ballingarry,	211	Ballintober,	407
		Ballintogher,	342
		Ballintoy in Antrim; Baile-an-tuaidh , the town of the north.

	PAGE		PAGE
Ballintra, Ballintrae, . . .	403	Ballybranagh, Ballybran-
Ballintruer,	243	nagh; Walsh's town.
Ballintry,	242	Ballybunnion; Bunnion's
Ballintubbert, Ballintub-		town.
brid; the town of the		Ballycahan, Ballycahane;
well.		O'Cahan's town.
Ballinulty; the town of the		Ballycahill; Cahill's Town.
Ulsterman.		Ballycarton,	207
Ballinure; the town of the		Ballycastle,	264
yew.		Ballyclare,	388
Ballinvallig, Ballinvally, .	341	Ballyclerahan; O'Clera-
Ballinvana,	19	han's town.
Ballinvarrig, Ballinvarry;		Ballyclough,	375
Barry's town.		Ballycloghan; the town of
Ballinvella,	462	the cloghan or stepping-
Ballinvilla,	462	stones.
Ballinvoher,	339	Ballyclohy,	375
Ballinvreena,	267	Ballyclug; the town of the
Ballinwillin,	344	bell.
Ballinwully,	19	Ballycolla; Colla's town.
Ballisk,	404	Ballyconnell,	149
Ballitore,	218	Ballycormick; Cormac's
Ballyagran,	18	town.
Ballyard; high town.		Ballycrogue,	355
Ballybane, Ballybaun;		Ballycullane; O'Collins's
white town.		town.
Ballybatter,	42	Ballydavock,	238
Ballybay,	448	Ballydehob,	233
Ballybeg; small town.		Ballydrehid,	337
Ballyblagh, Ballyblaugh;		Ballyduff; black town.
the town of the flowers.		Ballyea, O'Hea's town.
Ballyboe,	225	Ballyeighter; lower-town.
Ballybofey,	320	Ballyfoyle,	372
Ballyboggan; O'Bogan's		Ballygall,	91
town.		Ballygammon,	199
Ballyboghil in Co. Dublin;		Ballygarran, Ballygarrane,
the town of the crozier;		Ballygarraun; the town
from St. Patrick's cro-		of the shrubbery.
zier.		Ballygassoon,	195
Ballyboley,	221	Ballyglass; green town.
Ballyboro,	330	Ballygow,	206
Ballybough,	15	Ballygowan,	206
Ballyboughlin,	16	Ballyguile,	91
Ballybought,	15	Ballyheige,	321
Ballyboy,	327	Ballyhisky,	404
Ballybrack; speckled town.		Ballyhooly in Cork; Baile-

	PAGE		PAGE
atha-ubhla , the town of the ford of the apples.		of the caher or stone fort.
Ballyhoos,	8	Ballynacaird,	207
Ballykeel; narrow town.		Ballynacally; the town of the hag.
Ballyknick,	349	Ballynacard,	207
Ballyknock,	349	Ballynacarrick, Ballynacar- rig, Ballynacarriga, Bal- lynacarrigy; the town of the rock.
Ballyknockan; the town of the little hill.		Ballynaclogh,	375
Ballyknockan moat, . . .	86	Ballynacloghy,	375
Ballylahan,	327	Ballynacorra,	336
Ballylahessery,	223	Ballynacourty; the town of the court or mansion.
Ballylanders,	321	Ballynacoy,	437
Ballyleague,	326	Ballynadolly,	22
Ballylegan,	316	Ballynafagh,	274
Ballylesson,	252	Ballynafarsid,	332
Ballylicky,	330	Ballynafaua; the town of the declivity.
Ballylig, the town of the lug or hollow.		Ballynafey,	274
Ballylongford,	4	Ballynafie,	274
Ballylosky,	219	Ballynafoy,	274
Ballylough, Ballyloughan, Ballylonghaun; the town of the lake,	405	Ballynafunshin; the town of the ash.
Ballylusk,	219	Ballynagall,	91
Ballylusky,	219	Ballynagard,	207
Ballymagowan,	10	Ballynagarrick,	373
Ballymena, Ballymenagh, .	49	Ballynagaul,	91
Ballymoneen; the town of the little bog.		Ballynagee,	41
Ballymoney; the town of the shrubbery.		Ballynageeha,	41
Ballymore; great town; sometimes the mouth of the great ford (Bel-atha- moir).		Ballynageeragh,	424
Ballymote,	268	Ballynaglogh,	321
Ballynaas,	193	Ballynagore,	426
Ballynabarny, Ballyna- bearn, Ballinabarny; the town of the gap.		Ballynagown,	206
Ballynaboley, Ballyna- booly; the town of the booley or dairy place.		Ballynagran,	460
Ballynaboll; the town of the holes.		Ballynahaglish,	292
Ballynacaheragh; the town		Ballynahaha,	345
		Ballynahaiia,	345
		Ballynahatten,	458
		Ballynahattina,	458
		Ballynahinch,	276, 321
		Ballynahivnia,	410
		Ballynahone,	29, 410

	PAGE		PAGE
Ballynahow,	410	Ballyroe; red town.
Ballynahown, Ballyna-		Ballyroosky; the town of
howna,	29, 410	the marsh.
Ballynakill, Ballynakilla,		Ballysadare; Baile-easa-
Ballynakilly; the town		dara , the town of Eas-
of the church or wood.		dara (Four Masters):
Ballynakillew; the town		Eas-dara ; the waterfall
of the wood.		of the oak.
Ballynalackan, Ballyna-		Ballysaggart; the priest's
lacken; the town of the		town.
hill-side.		Ballysakeery,	47
Ballynamona,	420	Ballysallagh; dirty town.
Ballynamountain,	38	Ballyshane; John's town.
Ballynamuck; pig-town.		Ballyshannon,	171, 329
Ballynamuddagh; Baile-		Ballystrew,	412
na-mbodach , the town of		Ballysugagh,	196
the bodachs or churls.		Ballytarsna, Ballytarsney,
Ballynaraha; the town of		Ballytrasna; cross-town,
the rath or fort.		i. e. placed crosswise.
Ballynarea,	388	Ballyteige; O'Teige's town.
Ballynarooga,	107	Ballytober,	243, 407
Ballynascarry,	331	Ballytrofaun,	51
Ballynashallog,	198	Ballyvaghan, in Clare;
Ballynashee, Ballynashee-		Baile-ui-Bheachain ,
oge; the town of the		O'Beahan's town.
fairies.		Ballyvally,	340
Ballynasollus,	203	Ballyvangour,	351
Ballynatona, Ballynatone;		Ballyvarnet,	394
the town of the backside		Ballyvool,	221
or hill.		Ballyvooley,	221
Ballynavaddog,	435	Ballywater,	38
Ballyneddan,	413	Ballywatermoy,	38
Ballyneety,	321	Ballywhollart,	455, 456
Ballyness; the town of the		Ballywillen,	344
waterfall.		Balor's Castle, and Prison, .	151
Ballynew; new town.		Balrath,	321
Ballynisk,	404	Balrathboyne,	141
Ballynoe; new town.		Balrothery,	18
Ballynoran,	409	Balscaddan at Howth; the
Ballynure; the town of the		town of the scadans or
yew.		herrings.
Ballyorgan,	320	Balteen,	322
Ballyragget in Kilkenny;		Balteenbrack,	322
Bel-atha-Raghat (Four		Baltinglass,	69
Masters), Ragat's ford-		Baltrasna,	321
mouth.		Baltray,	403

	PAGE		PAGE
Baltyboys,	322	Baunoge; little green field.
Baltydaniel,	322	Baunreagh; grey green field.
Baltylum,	322	Baunskeha; the green field of the white-thorn.
Banagh, barony of,	131	Bauraneag,	20
Banagher,	352	Baurstookeen,	371
Banemore; great green field.		Bauville,	322
Bangor,	352	Bavan,	284
Banna,	351	Bawn,	284
Bannagh,	350	Bawnboy; yellow field.
Bannaghbane,	350	Bawnfoun,	29
Bannaghroe,	350	Bawnfune,	29
Bannamore,	351	Bawnmore; great green field.
Bannow,	100	Bawnoges,	31
Bansha; Bainseach , a level place.		Beagh,	448
Banteer; Bán-tir , lea or meadow land.		Beaghy,	448
Bantry,	116	Bealnashrura,	412
Barmeen,	469	Bear Island,	124
Barmona,	469	Bearhaven,	124
Barna,	394	Beglieve,	347
Barnaboy; yellow gap.		Behagh,	448
Barnacoyle,	454	Behanagh,	448
Barnacullia,	440	Beheenagh,	448
Barnadarrig, Barnaderg; red gap.		Behernagh,	448
Barnageeha, Barnageehy, .	394	Behy,	448
Barnagrotty,	363	Belan,	297
Barnakyle,	454	Belclare,	328
Barnane-Ely,	395	Belderg; red ford-mouth.
Barnes,	394	Belfarsad,	331
Barnish,	394	Belfast,	331
Barnismore,	394	Bellaghy,	328
Barr,	469	Bellanacargy,	329
Barranafaddock,	435	Bellanagare,	328
Barravore,	469	Bellanalack,	330
Barreragh,	469	Bellananagh,	425
Barroe; red top.		Bellaugh,	328
Barr of Slawin,	469	Belleek,	379
Barrow river,	73	Bellew,	462
Baslick,	297	Bellia,	462
Baslickane,	297	Bellow-tree,	461
Batterjohn,	42	Bell-tree,	461
Batterstown,	42	Belra,	254
Baunmore; great green field.		Belragh,	254
		Belraugh,	254

	PAGE		PAGE
Beltany,	187	Boleynagoagh,	437
Beltra; the mouth of the strand.		Boleyneendurrish,	244
Ben,	350	Boola,	220
Benagh,	350	Booladurragha,	220
Benamore,	354	Booldurragh,	220
Benaneha,	434	Booley,	220
Benbo,	351	Boolteens,	221
Benburb,	350	Boolteeny,	221
Bengore head,	350	Boolyglass,	220
Bengorm mountain; blue peak.		Booterstown,	44
Ben of Fore,	350	Borderreen,	339
Big Dog,	238	Borheen,	339
Bignion,	351	Borleagh,	339
Billy,	38	Bornacourtia,	339
Billywood,	201	Boro river,	330
Binbulbin,	130	Borris,	323
Binnafreaghan,	459	Borris-in-Ossory,	323
Binnion,	351	Borrisokane,	323
Blackvalley,	66	Borrisoleigh,	323
Bodoney,	280	Bough,	280
Bogagh, Beggagh, Boggan, Boggaun; a bog or boggy place.		Boula,	220
Bohaboy,	280	Boulabally,	221
Bahanboy,	281	Boultypatrick,	221
Bohaun,	281	Bourney; Bóirné , rocks; a rocky place.
Boher,	339	Bovevagh,	280
Boherard; high road.		Boyhill,	38
Boherboy,	2	Boylagh, barony of,	131
Bohercuill,	339	Boynagh,	411
Boherduff; black road.		Boyounagh,	410
Bohereen,	339	Boyne river,	73
Bohereenkyle,	339	Boystown,	322
Boherkill, Boherkyle,	339	Braade; Braghad , a throat or gorge.
Bohermeen; smooth road.		Brackagh, Brackenagh, Brackernagh, Bracklaght; a speckled place.
Bohernabreena,	267	Bracklin, Brackloon; speckled cloon or meadow.
Boherquill,	339	Braddocks,	465
Boherroe; red road.		Bradoge stream,	465
Boho,	280	Braid, The,	465
Bohoge,	281	Brandon hill,	139
Bohola,	280	Brankill,	434
Bohullion,	281	Brannock island,	237
Boley,	220
Boleylug,	220

	PAGE		PAGE
Breaffy,	431	Burren,	381
Breagho,	431	Burrenrea, Burrenreagh, .	381
Breaghva,	431	Burris,	323
Breaghwy,	431	Burriscarra,	323
Breaghy,	431	Burrishoole,	323
Breahig,	431	Burrisnafarney,	323
Breandrum; stinking ridge.
Bree,	356	Cabragh; bad land.
Breen,	267	Caddagh,	357
Breenagh,	268	Caddy,	357
Breenaun,	268	Cadian,	357
Breeoge,	268	Caher,	262
Bricklieve,	347	Caheragh; full of stone
Brigh,	356	forts.
Brigown,	356	Caherass,	414
Brittas; speckled land.		Caherbarnagh,	260
Britway,	431	Caherconlish,	262
Brockagh, Brocka,	432	Cahercorcaun,	373
Brockernagh,	432	Caherduggan; Duggan's
Brockey,	432	stone fort.
Brocklagh,	432	Cahereen,	263
Brockly,	432	Caherelly,	271
Brockna,	432	Cahergal,	263
Brockra, Brockry,	432	Caherkeen; beautiful stone
Bronagh,	345	fort.
Bruce,	266	Caherlarhig,	285
Bruckana,	432	Caherlustraun,	219
Brughas,	266	Cahermoyle,	418
Bruis,	266	Cahermurphy,	263
Bruff,	265	Cahersiveen,	262
Bruree,	265	Cahiracon,	237
Bruse,	266	Cahirconree in Kerry;
Bruslee,	339	Curee's fort, i. e. the
Bryanbeg, Bryanmore, . .	267	great chief, Curoi-mac-
Buffanoky,	434	Daire—1st cent.
Bullaun; a well in a rock.		Calary,	116
Bull, Cow, and Calf, . .	154	Caldragh,	291
Buncrana,	469	Callow,	418
Bunlahy; the end of the la-		Callowhill,	454
hagh or slough.		Calluragh,	291
Bunnatreesruhan,	243	Calry,	116
Bunratty,	469	Caltragh, Caltra,	291
Bunskellig,	383	Camas; see Camus.
Buntalloon,	469	Camline,	391
Burges,	323	Camlough; crooked lake.
Burnew,	381	Camus; anything that

	PAGE		PAGE
winds; generally a wind- ing stream.		Carnalbanagh; the Scotch- man's carn .
Canbo,	170	Carnalughoge,	307
Cangullia,	316	Carn-Amhalgaidh,	190
Cannafahy,	463	Carnane, Carnaun,	307
Cannaway; ceann-a'-mhaighe , head of the plain.		Carnbane; white carn .
Cape Clear island,	138, 139	Carn Clanhugh,	305
Cappa,	210	Carndonagh,	306
Cappacreen,	210	Carnearny,	102
Cappadavock,	238	Carnew,	306
Cappagh,	210	Carney,	307
Cappaghmore, Cappamore; great tillage-plot.		Carnfunnock,	434
Cappanacreha,	204	Carnfyan,	86
Cappanageeragh,	210	Carnglass; green carn .
Cappanalarabaun,	211	Carngranny,	308
Cappancur,	15	Carnkenny,	306
Cappanouk,	297	Carnlea,	305
Capparoe; red plot.		Carnmore; great carn .
Cappateemore,	210	Carnquill,	454
Cappawhite,	210	Carnsore Point,	98, 99
Cappeen,	211	Carnteel,	306
Cappog, Cappoge,	211	Carn Tierna,	306
Cappoquin,	210	Carntrone,	413
Cappy,	211	Carntogher hills,	305
Cappydonnell,	211	Carntruer hill,	243
Caran,	382	Carr,	381
Caraun,	382	Carra,	315
Carbury,	131	Carragh; rough or rocky land.
Carcullion,	381	Carran,	382
Cargagh; stony place.		Carrantuohill,	6
Cargan,	374	Carraun,	382
Cargin,	374	Carrick,	373, 374
Cargygray,	35	Carrickaneagh,	434
Carha,	315	Carrickanee,	434
Carhan,	452	Carrickaness,	15
Carheen,	382	Carrickanoran; the rock of the spring.
Carheens, Carheeny,	382	Carrickbeg; little rock.
Carhoo,	224	Carrickconeen,	430
Carhoon,	32	Carrickcroppan,	364
Carlingford,	98, 99	Carrickduff; black rock.
Carlow,	244	Carrickfergus; Fergus's rock.
Carmavy,	306	Carrickhawna,	189
Carn,	305	Carrickmore; great rock.
Carnacally; the hag's carn .		Carricknadarriff,	2
Carnagat,	306

	PAGE		PAGE
Carricknashoke,	433	Carrowcrin ; the quarter-
Carrick-on-Shannon, . . .	3	land of the tree.
Carrick-on-Suir,	3	Carrowduff ; black quarter-
Carrickshock,	433	land.
Carrig,	373, 374	Carrowgarriff,	224
Carrigadrohid ; the rock of		Carrowgarve,	224
the bridge.		Carrowkeel,	224
Carrigafoyle,	4, 373	Carrowmanagh ; middle
Carrigaholt,	208	quarter-land.
Carrigahowly,	208	Carrowmore,	224
Carrigaline in Cork ; the		Carrownaglogh ; the quar-
rock of O'Lehane.		ter-land of the stones.
Carrigallen,	373	Carrownaguivna,	206
Carrigan,	374	Carrownaltore,	111
Carriganaffrin,	110	Carrownamaddoo,	30
Carriganass,	14	Carrownamaddy,	30
Carrigane,	374	Carrownaweelaun,	435
Carrigans,	31	Carrowntober ; Ceath ramh
Carrigaphooca,	176	adh-an-tobair, the quar-
Carrigatna,	336	terland of the well.
Carrigaun,	374	Carrowreagh, Carrowrev-
Carrigcleena,	182	agh ; grey quarter-land.
Carrigdownane : Downan's		Carrowroe ; red quarter-
or Downing's rock.		land.
Carrigeen,	374	Carsan,	341
Carrigeenamronety, . . .	345	Cartron,	225
Carrigeennamoe ; the little		Cartronagilta,	226
rock of the cows.		Cartronbore,	339
Carrigeens,	31	Cartronganny,	226
Carrigleamleary in Cork ;		Cartronrathroe,	226
the rock of Laeghaire's		Casey glebe,	333
or Leary's leap.		Cashel,	172, 263
Carrignavar,	22	Cashelfean,	264
Carrigogunnell,	5	Cashelfinoge,	264
Carrive ; a quarter of land.		Cashelnavean,	264
Carrobaun,	224	Cashen river,	341
Carrogs,	382	Cashlan,	282
Carron,	307	Cashlancran,	282
Carron hill,	306	Cashlanawogga,	196
Carronadavderg,	307	Cashlaundarragh,	282
Carrow,	224	Cassagh,	333
Carroward ; high quarter-		Cassan,	341
land.		Castlebane, Castlebaun ;
Carrowbane, Carrowbaun,	224	white castle.
Carrowbeg,	224	Castlebar in Mayo ; Cais-
Carrowblagh ; the quarter-		len-an-Bharrraigh (Four land of the flowers.		Mast.) : Castle - Barry,

	PAGE		PAGE
(Downing, 1680), Barry's Castle; belonged to the Barrys after the English invasion.		Clarashinnagh,	389
Castlecomer: the castle of the river-confluence.		Clarbane,	389
Castleconnell,	46	Clarcarricknagun,	389
Castledargan,	264	Clarderry,	389
Castledermot,	299	Clare,	389
Castledillon,	299	Clareen,	389
Castlegarde,	207	Claregalway,	389
Castlehollis,	203	Clarehill,	389
Castlekieran,	299	Clarkill,	389
Castlelyons,	127	Clash; Clais , a trench.
Castlemoyle,	360	Clashanaffrin,	110
Castlepook,	177	Clashaniskera,	367
Castlerahan; the castle of the little rath or fort.		Clashduff; black trench.
Castlereagh,	281	Clashganniff, Clashganniv, Clashganny; sand-pit.
Castleruddery; the castle of the knight.		Clashmore; great trench.
Castleterra,	8	Clawinch,	29
Castleventry,	34	Cleenish,	401
Cavan,	366	Cleggan; see Claggan.
Cavanacaw,	366	Cleghile,	108
Cavanagh,	366	Cleighran,	378
*Cavanalick,	366	Cleraun,	378
Cavanreagh; grey hill.		Clerhaun,	378
Cavantreeduff,	243	Clerragh,	378
Cavany,	366	Clerran,	378
Cave of Dunmore,	396	Clifden,	50
Celbridge,	338	Cliffs of Moher,	275
Cheek Point,	173	Clinty,	217
Church Island,	144	Clintycracken,	217
Cladowen,	29	Clogh,	375
Claggan; Claigeann , the skull: — locally applied to a round hill.		Cloghan,	335
Clahernagh,	378	Cloghanaskaw,	335
Clananeese,	113	Cloghane,	335
Clanhugh Demesne,	113	Cloghanenagleragh,	335
Clankee, barony of,	113	Clogharinky,	197
Clanmaurice, barony of,	113	Cloghastookeen,	371
Clanwilliam, barony of,	113	Cloghaun,	335
Clara,	389	Cloghaunnatinny,	201
Claragh,	389	Cloghbally,	375
Claraghatlea,	389	Cloghboley,	375
		Cloghboola,	375
		Cloghbrack; speckled stone.
		Cloghcor; rough stone.
		Clogheen,	376
		Clogher,	376
		Cloghera,	378
		Clogherane,	378

	PAGE		PAGE
Clogherbrien; Braen's stony place.		Cluain - creamh , wild garlick meadow.
Cloghereen,	377	Cloncullen; holly meadow.
Cloghermore; great stony place.		Clondagad,	239
Cloghernagh,	378	Clondalee,	238
Clogherny,	378	Clondalkin; Cluain-Dolcain (Four Mast.), Dolcan's meadow.
Cloghfin; white stone or stone castle.		Clondallow,	180
Cloghineely,	152	Clonderalaw,	357
Cloghleafin; the castle of the grey shrubbery.		Clondouglas; the meadow of the black stream.
Cloghnagalt,	161	Clonduff,	424
Cloghoge,	376	Clone; Cluain , a meadow.
Cloghogle,	314	Clonea; Cluain - eich , the meadow of the horse.
Cloghpook,	177	Cloneen; little meadow.
Cloghran,	378	Clonegall,	91
Cloghtogle,	314	Clonelty,	427
Cloghvally,	375	Clonenagh in Queen's Co.; Cluain - eidhnech (O'C. Cal.), the ivy meadow.
Cloghvolie,	375	Clones,	215
Cloghvoola, Cloghvoolia, .	375	Clonfad, Clonfadda; long meadow.
Cloghvoula,	375	Clonfeacle; Cluain - fiacra (Book of L.), the meadow of the tooth.
Cloghy; a stony place.		Clonfert,	138
Clogrennan,	270	Clongall,	91
Cloheen,	376	Clongill,	91
Clohernagh,	378	Clongowes,	206
Clohoge,	376	Cloniff,	424
Clomantagh,	375	Clonkeen,	216
Clomoney,	375	Clonlea,	423
Clonad; long meadow.		Clonleigh,	423
Clonagh,	425	Clonliff; Cluain-luibh , the meadow of the herbs.
Clonallan,	216	Clonmacnoise,	66
Clonalvy,	231	Clonmeen; smooth meadow.
Clonamery,	359	Clonmel,	216
Clonard,	215	Clonmellon,	216
Clonarney,	457	Clonmelsh; sweet meadow.
Clonaslee,	339	Clonmore; great meadow.
Clonbeg; little meadow.		Clonmult,	216
Clonbrock,	432	Clonoghil; the meadow of the yew-wood.
Clonbrone; the meadow of the quern or mill-stone.
Cloncon,	429
Cloncoohy,	436
Cloncose,	397
Cloncough,	436
Cloncouse,	397
Cloncrew in Limerick;

	PAGE		PAGE
Clononey in King's Co. ; Cluain Camhna (Four Mast.), Damhan's or Da- vin's meadow.		Clooncunny; the meadow of the firewood.
Clonoulty in Tipperary ; the Ulsterman's meadow.		Cloondacarra,	238
Clonroad,	400	Cloondacon,	238
Clonroosk; the meadow of the marsh.		Cloondadauv,	238
Clonshire; western meadow.		Cloondaff,	19
Clonsilla; Cluain-saileach , the meadow of tallows.		Cloondanagh,	238
Clonskeagh; Cluain-sceach , bushy meadow.		Cloondara,	238
Clontarf,	423	Cloondelara,	238
Clontibret,	408	Cloonderavalley,	232
Clontinteen,	202	Cloonederowen,	231
Clontinty,	201	Conee; Cluainidhe , meadow land.
Clonturk; the boars' meadow.		Clooneen,	217
Clontuskert; see Cloontus- kert.		Cloonelt,	427
Clonty,	217	Clooney; see Cloonee.
Clontycoe,	437	Cloonfad; long meadow.
Clontycoo,	437	Cloonfinlough; the meadow of the clear lake.
Clonuff,	424	Cloongowan,	206
Clonygowan,	423	Clooniff,	424
Cloon,	216	Cloonkeen,	216
Cloonacaltry,	291	Cloonlara; the meadow of the mare.
Cloonaff,	424	Cloonlaughil; the meadow of the elm-wood.
Cloonagh,	425	Cloonlee; see Clonlea.
Cloonard,	215	Cloonlogher,	216
Cloonascoffagh,	51	Cloonmore; great meadow.
Cloonatreane,	435	Cloonnafinneela,	108
Cloonawillin; the meadow of the mill.		Cloonnagashel,	21
Cloonbeg; little meadow.		Cloonnaeeltoge,	422, note.
Cloonbrock,	432	Cloonoghil; the meadow of the yew wood.
Cloonburren,	381	Cloonrollagh,	447
Clooncah; battle meadow.		Cloonshannagh, Cloonshin- nagh; the meadow of the foxes.
Clooncon,	429	Clonshee.
Clooncoose,	397	Cloonsillagh; the meadow of the tallows.
Clooncose,	397	Cloontabonniv,	217
Clooncous,	397	Cloontakilla,	217
Clooncraft; Cluain-creamha (Four Mast.), wild gar- lick meadow.		Cloontakillew,	217
Clooncunna, Clooncunnig,		Cloontariff, Cloontarriv,	424
		Colonteen,	217
		Cloonties,	31, 217

	PAGE		PAGE
Cloontubbrid; the meadow of the well.		Coolballow,	322
Cloonturk; the boars' mea- dow.		Coolbally,	322
Cloontuskert,	216	Coolballyogan,	322
Cloonty,	31	Coolballyshane,	322
Cloontycommade,	199	Coolbanagher,	352
Cloonyhurk,	238	Coolcashin in Kilkenny; Cuil-caissine , Caissin's or Cashen's corner.
Cloran,	378	Coolbane, Coolbaun; white back, or white corner.
Clorane,	378	Coolboy; yellow back or corner.
Clorhane, Clorhaun,	378	Coolcronoge,	276
Clorusk,	375	Cooldao,	233
Clough,	375	Coolderry; back oak-wood.
Cloverhill,	34	Coole; a corner or a back.
Cloyne,	398	Cooleen; little corner.
Clyduff,	29	Cooleeny; little corners.
Colehill,	454	Cooleeshal, Coolishal; low corner.
Colerain,	472	Cooley hills,	155
Coleraine,	472	Coolfree,	459
Collon,	454	Coolgreany; sunny corner or back.
Colp,	154	Coolkeenaght,	125
Comber, 57, 413		Coolkill; back wood.
Comer,	57	Coolmountain,	38
Commaun,	393	Coolnabrone,	344
Commeen,	393	Coolnacart,	207
Coneykeare,	430	Coolnacartan,	207
Conicar,	430	Coolnagrower,	437
Conicker,	430	Coolnagun,	430
Conigar,	430	Coolnahinch,	401
Conlig,	429	Coolnanav,	424
Connaught,	73	Coolnanoglagh,	195
Connello,	127	Coolnashinnagh,	432
Connemara,	118	Coolnashinny,	432
Connigar,	430	Coolnasmear; the corner of the blackberries.
Connor; Condaire , i. e. Daire-con , the oak wood of the (wild) dogs.		Coolock, Coologe; culóg , little corner.
Conva,	429	Coolrahnee,	472
Convoy,	429	Coolrain, Coolraine,	472
Conwal,	24	Coolrainey,	472
Cooga,	225	Coolroe; red corner or back.
Coogaquid,	225	Coom,	393
Coogue,	225
Coolattin,	458
Coolavehy,	449
Coolavin,	118

	PAGE		PAGE
Coomacheo,	393	Corkaree, barony of,	120
Coomadavallig lake,	235	Corkashy,	416
Coombe in Dublin,	393	Corkeeran,	362
Coomdeeween,	196	Corkey,	416
Coomnagoppul at Killarney,	393	Corkish,	416
Coomnagun,	393	Corlat,	310
Coomnahorna,	393	Corlea; grey round-hill.
Coomyduff near Killarney,	66	Corlough,	435
Cooneen; little bay or corner.		Cormeen; smooth round-hill.
Coos,	397	Cornabaste,	22
Coosan,	397	Cornacreeve; the round-hill of the branchy tree.
Coosane, Coosaun,	397	Cornadarum,	234
Coose,	397	Cornagee,	362
Coosluhoga,	397	Cornageeha,	362
Cor, Corr,	362	Cornahoe; the round-hill of the cave.
Coracow,	231	Cornahoova,	398
Corballis, Corbhaile , odd-town.		Cornakessagh,	333
Corbally; odd-town.		Cornmucklagh,	428
Corbeagh,	362	Cornasleehan,	340
Corcagh,	416	Cornaveagh,	362
Corcaghan,	416	Corrabofin,	156
Corcashy,	416	Corracramph; the round-hill of the wild garlick.
Corcobaskin,	122	Corradeverrid,	234
Corcomohide,	113	Corradoo,	310
Corcomroe, barony of,	118	Corradooa,	310
Corcraun,	460	Corradooey,	310
Corcreevy; branchy round hill.		Corragunt,	255
Cordalea,	240	Corrahoash,	397
Cordangan; Cor-daingean , fortified round-hill.		Corrakeeran; the round-hill of the quicken trees.
Cordarragh; round hill of the oak.		Corranaffrin,	110
Corduff; black round-hill,		Corratober; the round-hill of the well.
Corgarve; rough round-hill,		Corraweehill,	418
Corglass; green round-hill,		Corray,	254
Corhawnagh,	213	Correen,	362
Corhawny,	213	Correenfeeradda,	362
Corhelshinagh,	202	Corrinenty,	244
Corick; a meeting—generally of two rivers,		Corrinshigo, Corrinshigagh; the round-hill of the ash trees.
Cork,	416	Corrofin in Clare; Coradh-
Corkagh: see Corcagh.
Corkaguiny, barony of,	123

	PAGE		PAGE
Finne (Four Mast.), Finna's Weir.		Creamh-choill , wild gar- lick wood.
Corrog, Corroge,	362	Crecora,	462
Corskeagh, the round-hill of the white thorns.		Creevagh,	407, 463
Cosbbride barony,	469	Creevary,	463
Coshlea barony,	468	Creeve,	462
Coshma barony,	469	Creeveroe,	84
Coshquin,	468	Creevery,	463
Cossaun,	341	Creivy,	463
Cowlagh in Cork; Quail- leach , abounding in poles or bare trees.		Creg,	373, 374
Coumanare,	108	Cregduff; black rock.
Coumaniller on Keeper-hill,	433	Cregg,	374
Coumshingane near Clon- mel,	422, note.	Creggan,	374
Cozies,	397	Creggane, Creggaun, . .	374
Craan, Craane,	382	Cremorne barony,	128
Crag,	373	Crew,	462
Craggykerrivan,	374	Crewhill,	462
Craglea,	183	Crimlin,	391
Craig,	373, 374	Crinkill; withered wood.
Craigatempin,	367	Crippaun,	364
Craigatuke,	433	Crisheen, Crisheeny, . .	301
Craigavad,	374	Crit,	362
Craigmore; great rock.		Croagh,	354
Cran,	460	Croaghan, Croaghaun, . .	354
Cranacrower,	460	Croaghpatrick,	183
Crancam,	460	Croaghrim; Cruach-dhruim , round ridge.
Crandaniel,	460	Crockada,	232
Crane,	382	Crockatanty,	279
Cranfield,	37	Crockaun; Cnocan , little hill.
Cranlome,	460	Crogh,	354
Crann,	460	Croghan, Croghanhill, . .	354
Crannagh,	461	Crohane,	49, 354
Crannaghtown,	35	Cromaglan, Cromagloun, .	392
Crannoge,	276	Cromkill; stooping wood.
Crannogeboy,	276	Cromlin,	391
Crannoge island,	276	Cromwell,	38
Cranny; same as Crannagh.		Cronoge,	276
Crappagh,	364	Crosh,	301
Cratlie,	348	Cross,	301
Cratloe in Clare; sallow wood.		Crossakeel; narrow or slen- der crosses.
Craughwell in Galway;		Crossan, Crossane, Cros- saun,	301
		Crossard; high cross.

	PAGE		PAGE
Crossboyne,	141	Cullentra, Cullentragh, . .	453
Crossderry; cross or transverse oak-wood.		Cullenwaine; Cuil-O-nDubh-ain (Four Mast.), the corner of the O'Duanes.
Crosserlough,	301	Cullion,	453
Crossery,	302	Cully,	440
Crossfarnoge,	301	Cullycapple,	440
Crossgar,	301	Culmullen; the angle of the mill.
Crossmacrin,	460	Cumber,	57, 413
Crossmaglen; Cros-meg-Fhloinn , the cross of Flann's son.		Cummeen,	393
Crossmolina,	301	Cummer,	57, 413
Crossoge,	301	Cunnagavale,	24
Crossreagh; grey cross.		Cunnaker,	430
Crotlie,	348	Cunnicar,	430
Crott,	362	Cunnigar, Cunnigare, . .	430
Crotta,	363	Curkeen,	416
Crottan,	363	Curkin,	416
Crottees,	363	Curkish,	416
Cruagh,	355	Curra,	416
Cruicetown,	35	Currabaha,	417
Cruit,	363	Curra-beha,	417
Crumlin,	391	Curragh,	416
Crusheen,	301	Curraghanearla; the earl's marsh.
Crushybracken,	301	Curraghbeg; little marsh.
Crussera,	302	Curraghboy; yellow marsh.
Crutt,	362	Curraghbridge,	36
Crutta,	363	Curraghduff; black marsh.
Cuilbeg; little wood.		Curraghglass; green marsh.
Cuilleen; little wood.		Curraghlahan, Curraghlane; broad marsh.
Cuilleendaeagh,	237	Curraghmore,	416
Cuilmore; great wood.		Curragh of Kildare,	416
Cuilsheeghary,	173	Curraghnadimpaun,	367
Cultybo,	440	Curraheen,	417
Culdaff in Donegal; Culdabhach [Culdavagh], the back of the flax-dam or pool.		Curreen,	417
Culfeightrin; Cuil-eacht-rann , the corner or angle of the strangers.		Currin,	417
Cullahill,	38, 454	Curry,	416
Cullan, Cullane, Cullaun, .	454	Cush,	468
Culleen,	440	Cushendall,	468
Cullen,	453	Cushendun,	468
Cullenagh,	453	Cuss,	468
		Cussan,	341
		Cussana,	341
		Cutteen; a commonage.

	PAGE		PAGE
Daar river,	444	Derrycoogh,	436
Daars,	31	Derrycreevy; branchy oak-wood.
Dalkey island,	98, 104	Derrydamph,	58
Dalriada,	80	Derrydorrage, Derrydor- raghy; dark oak-wood.
Damma,	233	Derryduff; black oak-wood.
Dangan,	282	Derryfadda; long oak-wood.
Dangandargan: Dargan's fortress.		Derrygarriff; Derrygar- riv, Derrygarve; rugged oak-wood.
Darragh,	445	Derrygraney,	308
Darray, Darray,	446	Derryhaw,	107
Davillaun,	41	Derryhawlach,	151
Dawross, Dawros head,	424	Derryhillach; the oak-wood abounding fallows.
Decomet,	200	Derryhirk; the oak-wood of the boar.
Deechomade,	200	Derryhowlaght,	151
Dehommed,	200	Derrykeadgran,	244
Deelis, Deelish; Duibhlios , black fort.		Derrylahan, Derrylane; broad oak-wood.
Deenish; same as Dinish.		Derrylahard,	353
Delville,	411	Derrylard,	353
Delvin,	127	Derrylea; grey oak-wood.
Derdaoil, or Dariel,	232	Derrymore; great oak-wood.
Derk,	397	Derrynacaheragh,	263
Derlett,	310	Derrynahinch; the oak-wood of the river-meadow.
Dernagree in Cork; the oak-wood of the cattle.		Derrynafeana,	86
Dernish,	444	Derrynane,	144
Derradha; Doire-fhada , long oak-wood.		Derrynanool,	29
Derragh; a place of oaks.		Derrynaseer,	207
Derreen,	446	Derrynashallog,	198
Derreens,	31	Derryness in Donegal; Doir-inis , oak-island.
Derries; oak woods.		Derryvullan; Doire-Mael- ain (Four Mast.), Mael- an's oak-wood.
Derrin; little oak wood.		Derrywillow,	322
Derrinlaur in Waterford; Doire-an-lair (Four Mast.) middle oak-wood.		Derrywinny,	8
Derry,	445	Desert,	298
Derryad, Derryadd, Derry- adda; long oak-wood.		Desertcreat,	234
Derryallen; beautiful oak-wood.
Derrybane, Derrybaun, Derrybawn; white oak-wood.
Derrybeg; little oak-wood.
Derrycaw,	107

	PAGE		PAGE
Desertegny; Egnagh's hermitage.		Donnycarney,	293
Desertmartin,	298	Donohill,	451
Desertoghill; the hermitage of the yew wood.		Donore; Dun-ubhair (Four Mast.), the fort of pride.
Desertserges,	298	Dooey,	309
Deune castle,	185	Doogary; Dubh-dhoire , black oak-wood.
Devenish,	424	Dooghcloon,	424
Devil's bit mountain,	394, 395	Doogort; black field.
Devlin,	334	Doohallat,	151
Diamor in Meath; Diamar (Dinn.), a solitude.		Doohamlat,	151
Dian,	283	Dooletter; black hill-side.
Dingin,	282	Doolin,	334
Dinginavanty,	282	Doon,	256
Dingle,	282	Doonan, Doonane,	259
Dinish; Duibh-inis , black island.		Doonans,	259
Dinn Righ,	86	Doonard; high fort.
Dirk,	397	Doonass,	414
Disert,	298	Doonbeg; small fort.
Doe, The, in Donegal,	115	Dooncaha,	107
Dog, Big, and Little,	238	Doondonnell in Limerick; Donall's fort.
Donabate,	209	Dooneen, Dooneens,	258
Donacarney; see Donnycarney.		Doonfeeny in Mayo; Finn's or Finna's fort.
Donagh,	233, 293	Doonooney; Dun-Una , Una's fort.
Donaghanie,	293	Dorrery,	446
Doghnacloney in Down; Domhnach-chluana , the church of the meadow.		Doughcloyne,	424
Donaghcumper in Kildare; the church of the cummer or confluence.		Doughloon,	424
Donaghedy in Tyrone; Domhnach-chaeide , Keedy or Caidoc's church. St. Caidoc, a companion of St. Columbanus.		Douglas,	411
Donaghmore,	293	Dowling,	334
Donaghmoyne,	293	Down,	258
Donard; high dun or fort.		Downamona,	258
Donegal,	89	Downeen,	258
Doneraile,	257	Downing,	258
Donnybrook; Domhnach-Broc , St. Broc's Church.		Downings,	258
		Downpatrick,	239, 258
		Downs,	258
		Drain, Drains,	456
		Drakestown,	35
		Dreen,	456
		Dreenagh,	457
		Dreenan, Dreenaan,	457
		Drehid,	337
		Drehidtarsna,	337

	PAGE		PAGE
Dressoge, Dressogagh; a briary or brambly place.		Drum,	465
Dresternagh, Dresternan, Dristernan; same as Dressoge.		Drumaa,	326
Drimagh,	466	Drumacrittin; Drumacruttin,	363
Drimeen, Drimmeen, . . .	466	Drumad; long ridge.
Drimna,	466	Drumadoon; the ridge of the fort.
Drimnagh,	466	Drumadrehid,	337
Drinagh,	457	Drumadried,	337
Drinaghan,	457	Drumagh,	465
Drinan,	456	Drumaheglis,	292
Drinane, Drinaun,	457	Drumahoe,	398
Drinny,	457	Drumanaffrin,	110
Drishaghaun; same as Dres- soge.		Drumanallig,	271
Drishane; same as Dressoge.		Drumane,	427
Drishoge; same as Dressoge.		Drumanure; the ridge of the yew.
Droghed,	337	Drumany; ridges or ridged land.
Drogheda,	337	Drumar,	108
Drom,	465	Drumard; high ridge.
Dromacummer, Dromcum- mer; the ridge of the river-confluence.		Drumarraght,	181
Dromada, Dromadda, . . .	465	Drumatemple; the ridge of the church.
Dromagh,	465	Drumballyrone; the ridge of O'Rooney's town.
Dromahaire,	181, 239	Drumbanagher,	352
Dromard; high ridge.		Drumbane, Drumbaun; white ridge.
Drombeg; small ridge.		Drumbarnet,	394
Drombofinny,	156	Drumbeg; small ridge.
Dromcolliher,	47	Drumbo, Drumboe,	422
Dromdaleague,	233	Drumbrughas,	266
Dromeen,	466	Drumcanon; the ridge of the white-faced cow.
Dromgarriff; rough ridge.		Drumcar in Louth; Druim- caradh (Four Mast.); the ridge of the weir.
Dromin,	466	Drumcaw,	234
Drominacreen,	460	Drumcliff in Sligo; Druim- chliabh (Four Mast.); the ridge of the baskets.
Dromina, Drominagh; same as Drimnagh.		Drumcolumb; St. Colum- ba's ridge.
Dromineer,	414	Drumcondra; Conra's ridge.
Dromkeen; beautiful ridge.		Drumashellig,	198
Drommahane; the ridge of the sieve-slits.
Drommoher,	275
Dromnagh,	466
Dromore; great ridge.
Dromtrasna; cross-ridge.

	PAGE
Drumcovit,	199
Drumcrin; the ridge of the tree.
Drumcroohen,	93
Drumcroon,	93
Drumcrow; the ridge of the cattle, sheds.
Drumcullen Drumcullion,	453
Drumdaff,	53
Drumdeeven,	196
Drumdeevin,	196
Drumderaown,	231
Drumderg; red ridge.
Drumduff; black ridge.
Drumderalena,	232
Drumederglass,	232
Drumfad,	465
Drumgallan,	315
Drumgil; the ridge of the Gall , or foreigner.
Drumgoff,	53
Drumgonnelly,	53
Drumgowna, Drumgow- nagh; the ridge of the heifers.
Drumhalry,	116
Drumhamon,	189
Drumharrieff,	423
Drumhawan,	189
Drumherriff,	423
Drumhillagh,	20
Drumhirk,	429
Drumhome,	14
Drumhuskert,	20
Drumillard,	433
Drumillar,	433
Drumina,	466
Drumkeen; beautiful ridge.
Drumkeeran,	452
Drumlane; Druim-leathan (Four Mast.), broad ridge.
Drumlease; Drum-lis , the ridge of the huts.
Drumline; flax ridge.
Drumlisk; the ridge of the lis or fort.

	PAGE
Drumlougher; rushy ridge.
Drumman, Drummans, . .	466
Drummany; same as Drum- any.
Drummeen,	466
Drummin,	466
Drummohar,	275
Drummond,	466
Drummuck,	17
Drummully; the ridge of the summit.
Drumnacarra,	315
Drumnacooha,	437
Drumnacross; the ridge of the cross.
Drumnafinnela,	108
Drumnagah,	107
Drumnaheark,	198
Drumnahoe,	398
Drumnahunshin; the ridge of the ash.
Drumnanaliv,	180
Drumnascamph,	58
Drumnashaloge,	198
Drumnasole,	202
Drumneen; little ridge.
Drumneth,	438
Drumnid,	438
Drumquin; Con's ridge.
Drumragh,	254
Drumraine, Drumrainy, Drumraney; ferny ridge.
Drumralla,	447
Drumreagh; grey ridge.
Drumroe; red ridge.
Drumroosk, Drumrusk, .	3
Drumsamny,	189
Drumsastry,	222
Drumsaul,	106
Drumsawna,	189
Drumshallon,	205
Drumshanbo; the ridge of the old tent (see Temple- shanbo).
Drumsheaver,	177

	PAGE		PAGE
Drumsillagh,	20	Duneane,	236
Drumsna; Druim-snámha , the ridge of the swim- ming-ford.		Duneight,	257
Drumturn; the ridge of the furnace.		Dunfanaghy in Donegal; Dun - Fionnchón , Finn- chu's fort.
Drumurcher,	157	Dungall,	90
Duagh in Kerry; Dubh-ath , black ford; from a ford on the Feale.		Dungannon in Tyrone; Dun - Geanainn (Four Mast.), Geanan's fort.
Duarrigle,	294	Dungarvan,	17
Dublin,	73, 333	Dunglow,	335
Dufferin barony,	223	Dunhill,	257
Duhallow,	386	Dunkineely in Donegal; Dun - mhic - Chionnfhael- aidh , Mackineely's or Maginley's fort.
Dulane,	62	Dunkit; Ceat's fortress.
Duleek in Meath; Daimh- liag (O'C. Cal.), stone house or church.		Dunleary,	130
Dulowbush,	180	Dunleer,	296
Dunaghy; Eochy's fort- ress.		Dunlewy; Lughaidh's or Lewy's fort.
Dunally,	257	Dunluce,	254
Dunamase in King's county; Dun-masc (wars of G.G.), the fortress of Masc, a man's name.		Dunmanway,	351
Dunamon,	256	Dunmore; great fort.
Dunboe,	422	Dunmore cave,	396
Dunboyne; Baeithin's or Boyne's fortress.		Dunmoylan; Moylan's fort.
Duncannon; Conan's fort- ress.		Dunmoyle,	360
Duncla near Granard, . . .	255	Dunmurry; Dun-Muireadh- aigh , Murray's fort.
Duncormick; Cormac's fortress.		Dunnalong,	209
Duncriffan at Howth, . . .	319	Dunnaman,	351
Duncrun,	93	Dunnamark,	209
Dundalk,	256	Dunnavenney,	351
Dundareirke,	235	Dunquin in Kerry; Duncaein (Four Mast.), beautiful fort.
Dundaryark,	235	Dunseverick,	274
Dunderk,	396	Dunshaughlin; Domhnach- Sechnaill , St. Sechnall's church. Sechnall, St. Patrick's nephew.
Dundermot; Diarmad's fort.		Duntinny,	201
Dunderrow,	13	Duntryleague,	242
Dundonald,	256	Durha.
Dundonnell,	256	Durless,	252
Dundrum,	257	Durnish,	444
		Durra,	13

	PAGE		PAGE
Durrow,	12	Enniskillen,	152
Dyan,	283	Ennistimon in Clare; Inis-
Dysart,	298	dimain (Four Masters),
Dysartenos,	148	Diman's island.
Dysert,	298	Errigal,	145, 294
Eantymbeg, Eantymore, . .	191	Errigal Kerrogue,	294
Eany river in Donegal.		Errigal Trough,	294
Easky in Sligo; from the		Esk,	405 river: — Iascach , fishy		Eskaheen,	404 river.		Eskenacartan,	405
Eden,	464	Esker,	366
Edenamohill,	195	Eskeragh	367
Edenderry,	464	Esker Riada,	366
Edentirory in Down, . . .	279	Eskragh,	367
Edentrillick near Dromore,	243	Estersnow,	298
Ederdacurragh,	232	Faddan,	413
Ederdaglass,	232	Faes of Athlone,	441
Edergole, Edergoole, . . .	470	Faha,	273
Edernish; central island.		Fahan,	27, 274
Ednashanlaght,	464	Fahanasoodry,	273
Ednego,	206, 264	Fahane,	274
Effrinagh,	111	Faheens,	274
Eglish,	291	Faheeran,	274
Eighterard,	470	Fahy,	273
Eighter Island,	470	Fahykeen,	274
Elagh,	271	Faiafannan,	274
Eliogarty in Tipperary, . .	126	Falleenadatha,	372
Ellagh,	271	Fardrum,	53
Elphin,	106	Fargrim,	53
Ely,	126	Farnagh,	454
Emania, palace of,	82	Farnaght,	365
Emlagh,	106, 418	Farnahoe,	398
Emly,	418	Farnamurry,	8
Emlygrennan in Limerick;		Farnane,	454
corrupted from Bile-		Farney,	455
Ghroidhnín , Grinin's bilé		Farnoge,	454
or old tree.		Farra,	192
Enagh,	191	Farragh,	192
Ennereilly,	414	Farraghroe,	192
Ennis,	400	Farranacardy,	207
Ennisboyne,	141	Farranboley,	221
Enniskeen in Cork; Inis-		Farranseer,	208
caein , beautiful island or		Farrow,	192
river-holm.		Farsetmore,	332
Enniskerry,	331	Farsid,	331

	PAGE		PAGE
Farta,	317	Finglas; clear stream,
Fartagh,	317	Finish,	441
Fartha,	317	Finisk,	40
Fary,	192	Finliff,	347
Fasagh,	442	Finn river and lake, . . .	162
Fassadinin,	443	Finnahy,	29
Fassagh,	442	Finnea,	326
Fassaroe,	443	Finnis,	441
Feagh,	441	Finnow stream,	410
Feale river,	155	Fintona,	41
Fearmore; great grass or grassy place.		Foilduff,	27
Fedany,	413	Foilnaman,	372
Feddan,	413	Foilycleara,	372
Feeagh,	441	Foorkill,	46
Feebane,	441	Forenaghts,	365
Feebeg,	441	Formal,	362
Feemore,	441	Formil,	361, 362
Feenagh,	442	Formoyle,	361
Feenish,	441	Formweel,	362
Feevagh,	441	Fornaght,	365
Feigh,	274	Forramoyle,	192
Feighcullen,	441	Forth,	123
Feltrim,	431	Foy,	274
Fenagh,	441	Foyagh,	274
Fennor; Finnabhair (Four Mast.), white field.		Foybeg,	274
Fermanagh,	121	Foyduff,	274
Fermoy,	115	Foyfin,	274
Fermoyle,	361	Foygh,	274
Fernagh,	454	Foyle,	372
Ferney,	454	Foylatalure,	27
Ferns,	454	Foymore,	274
Ferrard,	125	Foyoges,	274
Ferta,	317	Freagh; heath.
Fertagh,	317	Freaghduff,	458
Fethard,	441	Freaghillaun,	458
Fews,	441	Freaghmore,	458
Fews mountains,	154	Freahanes,	459
Fiddan, Fiddane, Fiddaun,	413	Freeduff,	458
Fiddaunnageeroe,	413	Freffans,	459
Fiddown,	441	Frehans,	459
Fidorfe,	50	Freshford,	34
Fihoges,	274	Freughmore,	458
Findrum,	29	Funcheon river,	447
Fingall,	89	Funshin,	448
		Funshinagh,	448
		Funshoge,	448

	PAGE		PAGE
Furrow,	192	Gearha,	443
Fyagh,	274	Gearhameen river,	444
Gairha,	443	Geeragh,	443
Galbally,	90	Gernonstown,	35
Galboley,	91	Giant's Causeway,	334
Galboola, Galbooly,	91	Girley in Meath; Greal- lach, a miry place.
Gallagh,	316	Glack; a hollow.
Gallan,	315	Glanbehy; birchy glen.
Gallane, Gallanes,	315	Glandaeagh,	237
Gallavally,	91	Glandine,	390
Gallen,	126	Glandore,	182
Gallon,	226	Glanmire near Cork, . . .	390
Gallonnamraher,	226	Glannagalt in Kerry, . . .	161
Gallow,	316	Glano,	451
Gallows hill,	355	Glantane, Glantaun, . . .	391
Galtrim,	456	Glanworth,	410
Galvally,	91	Glascloon; green meadow.
Galwally,	90	Glasdrumman, Glasdrum- mond; green ridge.
Galwolie,	91	Glashaboy,	411
Gardrum,	53	Glashare,	108
Gargrim,	53	Glashawee,	411
Garnavilla near Caher, . . .	462	Glasheen, Glasheena, . . .	411
Garracloon; rough meadow.		Glasheenaulin,	411
Garran, Garrane,	444	Glashina,	411
Garranbane, Garranbaun; white shrubbery.		Glasmullagh; green summit.
Garranes; shrubberies.		Glasnevin,	411
Garranmore; great shrubbery.		Glassan; a green place.	—
Garraun,	444	Glassavullaun,	358
Garry,	211	Glasthule; Tuathal's or Toole's streamlet.
Garryard; high garden.		Glen,	390
Garrycastle,	211	Glenacroghery,	205
Garryduff; black garden.		Glenagarey in Dublin, . . .	424
Garrymore; great garden.		Glenagower,	426
Garryowen,	211	Glenanaffrin,	110
Garrysallagh,	211	Glenanair in Limerick, . . .	108
Garryspellane; Spillane's garden.		Glenasmole,	437
Garryvicleheen,	211	Glenavy,	297
Garvagh; rough land.		Glenbane; white glen.
Garvaghy; rough field.		Glenbeg; little glen.
Garvary; rough land.		Glencar,	315
Gaulstown,	91	Glencovit,	199
Gay island,	436	Glencullen; holly glen.
Gearagh,	443	Glendaduff,	240

	PAGE		PAGE
Glendahork,	238	Gola,	470
Glendalough,	234	Golan,	470
Glendavagh,	234	Golden in Tipperary, . . .	470
Glendavock,	238	Gole,	470
Glendavoolagh,	233	Goleen,	470
Glendine,	390	Gort,	212
Glendowan mountains, . .	390	Gortaganniff, Gortaganny, .	212
Glenduff; black glen.		Gortahar,	382
Gleneany in Donegal, . .	460	Gortahork, Gortahurk,
Glenfada-na-sealga, . . .	391	Gortachurk; the field
Glenfarne,	454	of the oats.
Glengarriff; rugged glen, .	3	Gortalassa,	251
Gleninagh; the ivy glen.		Gortananny,	415
Glenish,	427	Gortanure,	212
Gleenkeen; beautiful glen.		Gortbofinna,	156
Glenmore; great glen.		Gortboy; yellow field.
Glenmullion,	390	Gortbrack; speckled field.
Glennagross,	390	Gorteen,	212
Glennahaglish,	292	Gortfad, Gortfadda; long
Glennahoo,	398	field.
Glennahulla,	311	Gortgranagh; grain field.
Glennamaddy,	390	Gortin,	212
Glennan,	391	Gortinagin,	205
Glennanoge,	195	Gortinlieve,	347
Glennasheever,	177	Gortinure,	212
Glennaun,	391	Gortmarrahafineen, . . .	108
Glennawoo,	181	Gortmillish,	212
Glennoo,	398	Gortmore; great field.
Gleno,	451	Gortnaboul,	22
Glenofaush,	154	Gortnadiha, Gortnadihy;
Glen of the Downs, . . .	258	the field of the caldron
Glenogra; Ogra's glen.		or hollow.
Glenosheen in Limerick, .	85	Gortnadullagh,	22
Glenquin,	48	Gortnafurra,	192
Glenreagh, Glenrevagh;		Gortnagarde,	207
grey glen.		Gortnaglogh,	212
Glenroe; red glen.		Gortnagoyne,	436
Glenscoheen,	154	Gortnagross; the field of
Glensmoil,	437	the crosses.
Glensoushka in Kerry, . .	156	Gortnahaha,	345
Glentane, Glentaun, . . .	391	Gortnahey,	345
Glenties in Donegal, . . .	391	Gortnahomna,	447
Glenwhirry in Antrim, . .	49	Gortnahoo, Gortnahoon;
Glin,	374, 390	the field of the cave.
Glynn,	391	Gortnamona; the field of
Gneeve, Gneevs,	235	the bog.

	PAGE		PAGE
Gortnamucklagh ; the field of the piggeries.		Greenan-Ely,	269, 270
Gortnasillagh ; the field of the sal lows.		Greenaun,	269
Gortnaskeagh,	457	Greenbatter,	42
Gortnaskehy,	457	Greenoge,	270
Gortnaskey,	458	Grenanstown,	269
Gortnavarnoge,	455	Grillagh, Grellagh ; same as Grallagh.
Gortnavern,	455	Gubbacrock,	235
Gortreagh ; grey field.		Gurteen,	212
Gortroe ; red field.		Gurteenasowna,	189
Gortvunatrim,	456	Gurteenroe ; red little field.
Gougane Barra ; St. Barra's or Finbar's rock-cleft,	416	Guilcagh in Waterford ; a place producing broom.
Goul,	470	Gyleen,	471
Goulaun,	470	Heagles,	292
Goulbeg,	471	Hill of Lloyd,	358
Gouldavoher,	232	Hinchoge,	448
Goulmore,	471	Horse island,	425
Gowel,	470	Howth,	73, 98, 319
Gowlan, Gowlane,	470	Idrone baronies,	121
Gowlaun,	470	Ikeathy barony,	121
Graffa, Graffee,	218	Illan, Illane, Illaun,	401
Graffan, Graffin,	218	Illanfadh,	401
Graffoge, Graffy,	218	Illaunanummera,	401
Gragan, Gragane,	324	Illaunfadda,	401
Grageen, Graigeen,	324	Illauninagh,	401
Graigue,	323	Illaunslee,	347
Graiguefrahane,	324	Imaile in Wicklow,	114
Graiguenamanagh,	324	Inagh,	460
Graiguenaspiddoge,	324	Inan, Inane,	460
Grallagh ; Greallach , a miry place.		Inch,	65, 400
Granagh, Granaghan ; a place producing grain.		Inchagoill,	88
Graney river,	308	Inchenny,	415
Grangegeeth ; windy grange.		Inchideraille,	232
Granny's grave,	308	Inchinagh,	448
Gransha ; a grange, a place for grain.		Inchmore ; great island.
Greagh ; a moory level spot among hills.		Inis,	400
Greaghnaroog,	107	Inish,	400
Great Bear island,	124	Inishannon,	14, 401
Great Connell,	24	Inishargy,	373
Greenan, Greenane,	269	Inishbofin,	64, 156
		Inishdadroum,	234
		Inishdavar,	234
		Inishdawee,	239

	PAGE		PAGE
Inshdaweel,	239	Keenagh, Keenaghan ; a
Inishfree,	459	mossy place.
Inishkeen ; beautiful island.		Keeran, Keeraun,	452
Inishkeeragh,	425	Keerhan, Keerhaun,	452
Inishlounaght ; the island of		Keimaneigh, Pass of,	426
new milk.		Kenmare,	464
Inishmaan in Galway ; mid-		Kenmare bay,	153
dle island.		Kerane, Keraun,	452
Inishmacsaint,	400	Kernan,	307
Inishnagor,	401	Kerry,	117
Inishowen,	130	Kerrykyle,	244
Inishrush ; the island of the		Kesh,	332
peninsula.		Keshcarrigan,	332
Inishturk ; boar island.		Kevit : see p. 199.
Inistioge in Kilkenny ;		Kilbaha ; birch wood.
Inis-Teoc (Book of L.),		Kilbarron ; St. Barran's
Teoc's island.		churc .
Innisfallen,	101, 143	Kilbarry in Waterford and
Inver in Donegal,	126	Cork ; from St. Barra or
Ireland,	81	Finbar of Cork.
Ireland's Eye,	74, 98, 101	Kilbeg ; small church or
Isertkelly,	299	wood.
Isertkieran,	299	Kilbeggan in Westmeath ;
Ishartmon in Wexford ;		Beccan's church.
Disert-Munna , St. Mun-		Kilbeheny,	448
na's hermitage. P. 279.		Kilbreedy ; St. Bridget's
Islafalcon,	39	church.
Island Magee,	369	Kilbride,	289
Isle of Man,	152	Kilbroney in Down ; St.
Iveleary,	114	Bronach, Virgin, patron.
Iverk barony,	114	Kilcaragh in Kerry and
Iveruss,	114	Waterford ; the church of St. Carthach of Lis-
Kanturk,	429	more. See p. 250.
Keadagh,	357	Kilcavan in Wexford ;
Keadeen hill,	357	church dedicated to St.
Keadew,	357	Kevin of Glendalough.
Keady,	357	Kilclare,	440
Keadydrinagh,	357	Kilclay,	288
Keale, Keel ; a narrow place,		Kilcleagh,	288
valley, or river.		Kilclief, in Down,	288
Keeldra,	291	Kilcock.
Keeldrum ; narrow ridge.		Kilcolman,	289
Keeloge, Keeloges,	31	Kilcommon ; St. Coman's
Keelty ; woods.		church.
Keenaght barony,	125	Kilcruaig,	355

	PAGE		PAGE
Kilcruit,	363	Killederdaowen,	231
Kilcullen,	290	Killeany in Galway; the
Kildare,	106	church of St. Enna or
Kildaree,	239	Endeus of Aran — 5th
Kildimo; St. Dima's church.		cent.
Kildorrery,	446	Killeedy,	137
Kildrought,	337	Killeen,	290
Kilduff; black church or		Killeenatruan,	413
wood.		Killeenerk,	198
Kilfinnane, 94,	144	Killeennagallive,	180
Kilfithmone,	441	Killeens,	290
Kilflyn; Flann's church.		Killeentiers,	290
Kilgarriff, Kilgarve; rough		Killeeny,	290
church or wood.		Killeigh,	290
Kilgarvan; St. Garbhan's		Killeighter,	470
church.		Killenaule,	136
Kilgullane,	316	Killery harbour,	47
Kilkee in Clare; St. Caeidhe's		Killeter,	470
or Kee's church.		Killetra,	470
Kilkeedy in Clare and		Killevy,	347
Limerick; St. Caeide's		Killinardan,	353
or Keedy's church.		Killiney in Dublin; Cill-
Kilkeel; narrow church.		Inghen , or Cill-Inghen-
Kilkenny,	289	Leinin , the church of
Kilkieran,	140	Lenin's daughters.
Killadangan,	283	Killiney in Kerry; same
Killadrown,	231	saint as Killeany.
Killadysert, in Clare; the		Killisk,	404
church of the hermitage.		Killiskea,	404
Killaloe in Clare and Kil-		Killiskey,	404
kenny; Cill-Dalua (O'C.		Killoe,	451
Cal.), the church of St.		Killonan,	146
Dalua or Molua — flou-		Killursa in Galway; St.
rished, 6th cent.		Fursa of Peronne — 6th
Killanummery,	359	century.
Killarney,	457	Killybegs,	31
Killarney lakes,	405	Killycrappin,	364
Killashandra,	56	Killygordon in Donegal;
Killashee,	173	Coill-na-gcuiridin (Four Killaspugbrone,	77	Mast.), the wood of the
Killaspuglonane in Clare;		parsnips.
the church of bishop		Killynamph,	21
Flannan.		Killyon,	140
Killavil,	29	Kilmacanoge in Wicklow;
Killea: Aedh's or Hugh's		the church of St. Mo-
church.		chonóg, a primitive saint.

	PAGE		PAGE
Kilmacrenan in Donegal; Cill-mac-nEnain (Four Mast.), the church of the sons of Enan, nephews of St. Columba.		Kinalea barony,	113
Kilmainham,	48	Kinalmeaky barony,	113
Kilmallock,	143	Kinard,	463
Kilmanagh,	136	Kinawly,	135
Kilmeedy,	138	Kincon,	463
Kilmihil; the church of Michael the Archangel.		Kincora,	336
Kilminfoyle,	16	Kineagh in Kildare; the head or hill of the horse.
Kilmore,	439	Kinego,	206
Kilmore-Moy,	97	Kingstown,	130
Kilmountain,	38	Kinlough; head of the lake.
Kilmoyle,	360	Kinnea,	425
Kilmurry,	289	Kinnegar,	430
Kilnafrehan,	459	Kinneigh, in Cork,	425
Kilnahulla,	311	Kinnitty,	144
Kilnahushoge,	438	Kinsale,	464
Kilnaleck; the wood of the flag-surfaced land.		Kinsalebeg,	464
Kilnalun,	437	Kinsaley,	464
Kilnamanagh,	439	Kinturk,	464
Kilmanarve,	107	Kinure; the head of the yew.
Kilnamona,	181	Kinvarra,	464
Kilpatrick; St. Patrick's church.		Kippagh; a place full of stumps of trees.
Kilquane; St. Cuan's church.		Kish,	332
Kilreisk,	417	Kisha,	333
Kilroot in Antrim; Cill- ruadh , red church.		Kishaboy,	333
Kilrush; the church of the wood or peninsula.		Kish light in Dublin bay,	332
Kilskeer in Meath; the Vir- gin St. Scire—6th century.		Kishoge,	333
Kiltenan,	22	Knappagh,	363
Kiltenanlea,	22	Knappoge,	363
Kiltinny,	201	Knawhill,	108
Kiltubbrid; the church of the well.		Knicken,	349
Kiltulla,	355	Knock,	348
Kiltybegs; little woods.		Knockacullen, Knockacul- lin, Knockacullion; the hill of the holly.
Kiltyclogher; stony woods.		Knockaderry; the hill of the oak-wood.
Kilulla,	311	Knockadoo,	309
Kilwatermoy,	38	Knockadreet,	337
		Knockadrehid,	337
		Knockagallane,	315
		Knockagh; a hilly place.
		Knockahorra,	315
		Knockainy in Limerick;

	PAGE		PAGE
the hill of Aine, a celebrated banshee.		Knockatoor; the hill of the bleach-green.
Knockalassa,	251	Knockatotaun,	219
Knockalegan,	316	Knockaun,	349
Knockalisheen; the hill of the little lis or fort.		Knockaunavogga,	196
Knockalough; the hill of the lake.		Knockaunbaun,	2
Knockaluskraun,	219	Knockauneevin; beautiful little hill.
Knockan, Knockane,	349	Knockaunnadrangady, 422, note.
Knockanaffrin,	110	Knockaunnagoun,	205
Knockanare; the hill of the slaughter.		Knockauntouragh,	272
Knockanaryark,	200	Knockaunvieteera,	432
Knockaneag,	427	Knockavilla, Knockavilly; the little hill of the old tree.
Knockanee	427	Knockavoe,	170
Knockanemorney,	381	Knockawaddra; the little hill of the dog.
Knockanenabohilly,	195	Knockbane, Knockbaun; white hill.
Knockanevin; beautiful hill.		Knockbine,	351
Knockanglass, Knockane-glass; green little hill.		Knockboha,	281
Knockaniska,	404	Knockboy; yellow hill.
Knockannamohilly,	194, 195	Knockbrack; speckled hill.
Knockannavlyman,	196	Knockbroad,	38
Knockanoran,	409	Knockcroghery,	204
Knockanree,	20	Knockdoo,	19
Knockanroe, Knockaneroe; red little hill.		Knockdown,	39
Knockanully,	311	Knockduff,	19
Knockanure; the hill of the yew.		Knockea,	349
Knockaphreaghaun; the hill of the crow.		Knockeen,	349
Knockataggart; the hill of the priest.		Knockeennahone,	398
Knockatancashlane,	22	Knockerk,	198
Knockatarriv,	423	Knockfierna,	349
Knockatarry,	423	Knockglass; green hill.
Knockatarriff,	423	Knockgorm; blue hill.
Knockatemple; the hill of the church.		Knockgraffon,	178
Knockatinnole,	192	Knocklaid in Antrim,	349
Knockatloe,	193	Knocklofty in Tipperary; Cnoc-lochta , the lofted or shelving hill.
Knockatlowig,	193	Knocklong in Limerick,	94
Knockatober; the hill of the well.		Knockloskeraun,	219
		Knockma near Tuam,	171
		Knockmanagh; middle hill.
		Knockmealdown mountains;

	PAGE		PAGE
Cnoc-Maeldomhnaigh , Maeldowney's hill.		Knocknanuss,	427
Knockmehill,	418	Knocknarea near Sligo; the hill of the executions. See Ardnarea.
Knockmore; great hill.		Knocknasawna,	189
Knockmoyle; bald hill.		Knocknasheega,	173
Knockmullin; the hill of the mill.		Knocknaskagh, Knockna- skeagh; the hill of the whitethorns.
Knocknabeast,	185	Knocknawhishoge,	437
Knocknaboha,	281	Knockninny,	141
Knocknabohilly,	195	Knockpatrick; Patrick's hill.
Knocknaboley, Knockna- boola, Knocknabooly; the hill of the dairy place.		Knockraha, Knocknaraha; the hill of the rath or fort.
Knocknaclogha,	196	Knockranner,	19
Knocknacrohy,	204	Knockranny; ferny hill.
Knocknafeadalea,	178	Knockrath; the hill of the rath or fort.
Knocknafreeny,	110	Knockrawer; the same as Knockranner.
Knocknagapple,	426	Knockreagh; grey hill.
Knocknagappul,	426	Knockroe; red hill.
Knocknagaul in Limerick; the hill of the Gauls or foreigners.		Knockrour, Knockrour,	19
Knocknageeha; the hill of the wind.		Knockshanbally; the hill of the old town.
Knocknagin,	205	Knocksouna,	189, 242
Knocknaglogh; the hill of the stones.		Knocktemple; the hill of the church.
Knocknagore,	21	Knocktopher,	50
Knocknagough,	437	Knockullard,	456
Knocknagower,	21	Knoppoge,	363
Knocknagown,	205	Kyle,	290 440
Knocknagree; the hill of the cattle.		Kylebeg; small church or wood.
Knocknaguilliagh,	21	Kylefreaghane,	459
Knocknahoe, Knocknahoo- an; the hill of the cave.		Kylemore,	440
Knocknahorna; the hill of the barley.		Kylenagoneeny,	430
Knocknaloorigaun,	177, 178	Kyletaun,	440
Knocknamoe,	21	Labbacallee,	314
Knockamohill,	195	Labbadermody,	314
Knocknamona; the hill of the bog.		Labba Iscur,	313
Knocknamuck; the hill of the pigs.		Labbamolaga,	143
		Labbasheeda,	313

	PAGE		PAGE
Labby,	313	Lakyle; half wood.
Labbyeslin,	313	Lambay island,	98, 102
Lack,	378	Lambeeher,	142
Lacka; a hill side.		Lanaglug,	296
Lackabane, Lackabaun; white hill side.		Landahussy,	296
Lackagh,	380	Landbrock,	297
Lackamore; great hill side.		Landmore,	296
Lackan,	380	Lannyhussy,	296
Lackanagrour,	437	Laragh,	285
Lackanascarry,	331	Laraghbryan; Bryan's house site.
Lackanadarra, Lackanadar- ragh; the hill side of the oak.		Laraghleas,	285
Lackareagh; grey hill side.		Laraghshankill,	285
Lackaroe; red hill side.		Lareen,	285
Lackaun,	380	Largan,	368
Lackeen,	379	Larganreagh; grey hill side.
Lacken,	380	Largy,	367
Lackenacoombe,	393	Largynagreana,	367
Lackendarragh; the hill- side of the oak.		Largysillagh,	368
Lagacurry,	392	Larne in Antrim,	116
Lagan,	73, 393	Larne river,	310
Laganeany,	188	Larrycormick,	39
Laghil, Laghile; elm wood.		Lateeve; half-side, i. e. one side of a hill.
Laght,	310	Latt,	310
Laghta,	310	Latteragh,	368
Laghtagalla,	310	Laughil,	449
Laghtane,	310	Laune river,	449
Laghy in Donegal; a miry place.		Lauragh,	285
Lagnagalloglagh,	392	Lavagh; abounding in elms or marsh-mallows.
Lagnavidoge,	392	Lavally,	223
Laharan, Lath-fhearann ; half land.		Lavey; elm land.
Lahard,	353	Laxweir near Killaloe,	99, 101
Lahardan, Lahardane,	353	Leaffony,	443
Lahardaun,	353	Leafin,	443
Laheen; a little lahagh , or miry place.		Leagh; a grey place.
Laheratanvally,	285	Leamcon; the hound's leap.
Lahertidaly,	285	Leamirlea,	159
Lahesheragh,	222	Leamlara; the mare's leap.
Lahesseragh,	223	Leamybrien,	159
Lahinch,	401	Leamydoody,	159
		Leamyglissan,	159
		Leap castle,	160
		Lear,	471
		Lecale barony,	223

	PAGE		PAGE
Lecarrow,	224	Letterbrick,	369
Leck,	378	Letterbrock,	369
Leckan, Leckaun,	380	Letterfad; long wet hill-
Lecknavarna,	455	side.
Leckpatrick; Patrick's flag-		Lettergeeragh,	369
stone.		Letterkeen,	369
Leeg,	379	Letterkenny,	131
Leegane,	316	Letterlicky,	369
Leek, Leeke,	379	Lettermacaward in Done-
Lefin,	443	gal; the wet hill-side of
Legacurry, Legachory, .	392	Mac-Ward, or the bard's
Legan,	316, 393	son.
Legananny; the hollow of		Lettermore; great wet hill-
the marsh.		side.
Legane, Legaun,	316	Lettermullen,	368
Leggandorragh; dark little		Lettershanbo; the wet hill-
hollow.		side of the old tent.
Legland; same as Leighlin.		Lettershendony,	369
Legnabraid; the hollow of		Lettery; same as Lettera.
the gorge.		Levally,	223
Legvoy.		Levallyreagh; grey half-
Lehinch,	401	town.
Leighlin,	391	Leven in Scotland, . . .	449
Leighmoney,	443	Lewagh near Thurles; land
Leinster,	86, 104	producing marsh-mallows.
Leitrim,	466	Leyny barony,	126
Leixlip,	98, 101	Liafin,	443
Lemanaghan in King's coun-		Lick,	378
ty; Liath-Manchain (Four		Lickbla,	155
Mast.), St. Manchan's grey		Licken,	379
land.		Lickfinn; white flag-stone.
Lemnalary in Antrim; the		Lickmolassy,	379
mare's leap.		Lickoran in Waterford;
Lenaboy; yellow wet-mea-		the flag-stone of the cold
dow.		spring.
Lenamore; great wet-mea-		Lifford,	57
dow.		Liggins,	316
Leny; a wet meadow.		Lightford bridge in Mayo,	203
Lennox in Scotland, . .	449	Lignapeiste,	185
Lerhin,	285	Limerick,	46
Lerrig in Kerry; a hill-side.		Lisadian,	283
Lessans,	252	Lisalbanagh,	251
Letfern,	310	Lisanisk,	260
Letter,	368	Lisanisky,	260
Lettera, Letteragh; wet		Lisaquill; the fort of the hill-sides.		hazel.

	PAGE		PAGE
Lisarearke,	200	Lismore,	250
Lisataggart,	251	Lismoyle,	360
Lisavaddy; the fort of the dog.		Lismullin; the fort of the mill.
Lisbalting,	187	Lisnabantry,	251
Lisbane, Lisbaun; white fort.		Lisnabilla,	461
Lisbarnet,	394	Lisnacroppan,	364
Lisbellaw,	328	Lianacullia; the fort of the wood.
Lisboduff,	156	Lisnadarragh; the fort of the oak.
Lisbofin,	156	Lisnadurk,	22
Lisboy; yellow fort.		Lisnafeddaly,	179
Liscahane,	251	Lisnafiffy,	50
Liscahill; Cahill's fort.		Lisnafinelly,	108
Liscannor,	251	Lisnafulla,	108
Liscarroll,	251	Lisnagannell,	179
Liscartan; the fort of the forge.		Lisnagat; the fort of the (wild) cats.
Lisclogher; stony fort.		Lisnageenly,	179
Lisconnell,	179	Lisnageeragh,	261
Lisdachon,	237	Lisnagonnell,	179
Lisdarush,	235	Lisnagore,	29
Lisdaulan,	237	Lisnagowan,	261
Lisdavock,	238	Lisnagower,	29
Lisdavraher,	239	Lisnagree,	261
Lisdavuck,	238	Lisnagry,	261
Lisdoo; black fort.		Lisnagunnell,	179
Lisdoonan,	260	Lisnahall,	372
Lisdoonvarna,	259	Lisnahay,	345
Lisdown,	260	Lisnahirka,	198
Lisdowney in Kilkenny; Downey's fort.		Lisnahoon,	398
Lisduff; black fort.		Lisnalee,	19
Lisduggan; Duggan's fort.		Lisnamuck; the fort of the pigs.
Lisfarbegnagommaun in Clare,	178	Lisnamulligan,	39
Lisfennell,	108	Lisnaskea in Fermanagh; Lios-na-sceithe , the fort of the bush: this was the inauguration tree of the Maguires.
Lisgarriff; rough fort.		Lisnanees,	3
Lisgonnell,	179	Lisnapaste,	185
Lisheen,	251	Lisnascragh,	179
Lisheenaleen; the little fort of the flax.		Lisnatreeclee,	243
Lislarheen,	285	Lisnaveane,	85
Lislea; grey fort.
Lislevane in Cork; the fort of the elm.

	PAGE		PAGE
Lisnaviddoge,	22	Lough Boderg,	156
Lisnisk,	260	Lough Bofin,	156
Lisnisky,	260	Loughbollard,	322
Lispopple,	194	Loughbrickland,	46
Lisrathdine,	269	Lough Conn,	405
Lissadill,	251	Lough Corrib,	153
Lissadoill,	251	Loughcrew,	463
Lissakeole,	178	Loughcrot,	363
Lissan,	252	Lough Dagea,	237
Lissanaffrin,	110	Lough Derg on the Shan-
Lissanalta,	354	non,	160
Lissane,	252	Lough Derravara,	447
Lissaneena, Lissaneeny, .	191	Lough Erne,	165
Lissaneigh,	434	Loughfad ; long lake.
Lissaniska, Lissanisky, .	260	Lough Finn in Donegal, .	162
Lissaphuca,	176	Lough Foyhin,	274
Lissard ; high fort.		Lough Gillagancan,	180
Lissarinka,	178	Lough Gillaganleny, 180,	181
Lissen Hall.		Lough Graney,	308
Listowel,	251	Loughill,	449
Lissonuffy in Roscommon ;		Lough Lagan,	393
Lios-O-nDubhthaigh (Four		Lough Leane at Killarney,	405
Masters), the fort of the		Lough Loughan,	436
O'Duffys.		Loughlynch,	401
Little Dog,	238	Lough Melvin,	50
Lixnaw,	335	Loughmuck,	163
Loghill,	449	Loughnagin,	205
Lonart,	277	Loughnagoyme,	436
Londonderry,	445	Loughnahinch,	275
Longfield,	37, 449	Loughnaloughan,	436
Longford,	276	Loughnapiast,	185
Loop Head,	159	Loughnasollis ; the lake of
Lorum,	18	the light.
Loskeran,	219	Loughnaweeloge,	435
Lough,	405	Lough Neagh,	165
Loughan,	406	Lough Oughter,	469
Loughanagore,	435	Loughrea,	405
Loughanaskin,	406	Loughwheelion,	435
Loughandoul,	185	Luffany,	50
Loughane, Loughaun, . . .	406	Lugalustran,	219
Loughanreagh,	406	Lugatryna,	435
Loughanstown,	406	Lugduff mountain,	392
Loughaunnaweelaun, 406,	435	Lugganaffrin,	110
Lough Avaul,	4	Lughanagh,	27
Loughbanagher,	352	Lughinny,	27
Loughbeg ; little lake.		Lugmore ; great hollow.

	PAGE		PAGE
Lugnademon,	184	Magheramore; great plain.
Lugnamuddagh,	21	Magherareagh; grey plain.
Lugnaquillia mountain,	392	Magherarny,	457
Lumcloon; bare meadow.		Maghery,	387
Lurgan,	468	Magunihy barony,	386
Lurraga,	468	Mahanagh; a place produc-
Lusk; Lusca , a cave.		ing sieve-slits.
Lusmagh in King's County;		Mahee Island,	133
the plain of herbs.		Maigue river,	30
Lynally,	295	Maine, Mayne,	387
Lynn,	296	Malahide river,	91
Lyrane, Lyrane,	471	Mallow,	385
Lyranearla,	471	Man, Isle of,	152
Lyre, Lyreen,	471	Manulla in Mayo; Magh-
Lyrenafreaghaun,	459	Fhionnalbha (Hy F.),
Lyrenageeha,	471	Finalva's plain.
Lyrenagreana,	472	Masreagh,	467
Mace,	467	Massareene,	467
Mackan, Mackanagh, Mack-		Massbrook,	111
nagh, Mackney; a place		Massreagh,	467
producing parsnips.		Masteragwee,	41
Macosquin,	385	Mastergeeha, Mastergeehy,	41
Madame,	42	Maulagh,	359
Magh-Breagh,	384	Maulane,	359
Magh-da-Chainneach,	235	Maulanimerish,	359
Magh-da-Chairneach,	235	Maulashangarry,	359
Magh-da-ghabhal,	235	Maulnahorna,	359
Magh-da-gheisi,	235	Maulnarouga,	107
Maghera,	387	Maum,	164
Maghera in Derry,	135	Maumakeogh,	165
Maghera in Down,	134	Maum Hotel,	164
Magherabane, Maghera-		Maumnahaltora,	165
baun; white plain.		Maumnaman,	165
Magherabeg; small plain.		Maumturk,	164
Magheraboy; yellow plain.		Mausrevagh,	467
Magheracloone; the plain		Mausrower,	467
of the meadow.		Maw,	386
Magheraculmoney; the		Mawillian,	344
plain of the back of the		Maws,	386
shrubby.		Maynooth,	125
Magheradrool,	387	Mayo,	450
Magherahoney	38	Mealagh,	361
Magheralamfield,	449	Meelaghans,	361
Magheramenagh; middle		Meeldrum,	361
plain.		Meeleen,	361
		Meelgarrow,	361

	PAGE		PAGE
Meelick.	419	Molosky,	219
Meelon,	361	Monabraher,	420
Meelshane,	361	Monagay,	435
Meenabrock; the mountain- meadow of the badgers.		Monaghan; Muineachán , a place abounding in little hills.
Meenadreen; the mountain- meadow of the blackthorns.		Monagilleeny,	290
Meenagorp,	107	Monalour,	420
Meenanall,	163	Monamintra,	420
Meenavanaghan,	351	Monamraher; the bog of the friars.
Meenavean,	85	Monanearla,	420
Meendacalliagh,	240	Monaquill,	454
Meenkeeragh; the moun- tain meadow of the sheep.		Monard; high bog.
Mellison,	252	Monashinnagh,	432
Middlethird,	223	Monasteranenagh,	191
Milane,	361	Monasterboice; the monas- tery of St. Boethius or Buite, the founder—6th century.
Milleen,	359	Monasterevin; from St. Evin, the founder, a con- temporary of St. Patrick.
Milleenahorna; the little hill of the barley.		Monasteroris in King's county; the monastery of Mac Feorais or Ber- mingham, the founder— A. D. 1325.
Milleeny,	31	Monatarriv; the bog of the bull.
Milligan, Milligan's, . . .	361	Monatore,	218
Milltown,	344	Monearmore; great meadow.
Moanmore; great bog.		Moneen,	420
Moanroe; red bog.		Moneenabrone,	420, 421
Moanvane, Moanvaun; white bog.		Moneenagunnel,	420
Moat,	268	Money,	443
Moate,	268	Moneydorrigh,	443
Mocollop; the plain of the collops or cattle.		Moneyduff; black shrub- bery.
Modeshill; the southern plain.		Moneygall,	91
Mogeely,	387	Moneygorm; blue shrubbery.
Mogh,	232	Money more; great shrubbery.
Moher; Moher Cliffs, . . .	275	Moneyscalp,	395
Mohera,	275	Moneyteige; Teige's shrub- bery.
Moheracreevy,	275	Monivea,	443
Moheragh,	275	Monroe; red bog.
Moheranea,	275
Mohereen,	275
Mohill,	418
Moig, Moigh,	386
Moirá; Magh-rath , the plain of the forts.
Molly,	38
Mollynadinta,	201

	PAGE		PAGE
Montanavoe,	280	Moyne,	387
Montiagh, Montiaghs, . .	421	Moynoe,	451
Mooretown,	35	Moynore; the plain of the
Morgallion,	126	yew.
Mota,	268	Moyrus; the plain of the
Mothel, Mothell,	418	promontory.
Mountgarret,	268	Moys,	386
Mountmellick,	419	Moyvally,	341
Mountsion,	39	Muckamore in Antrim;
Mourne barony and moun-		Magh-comair (Four Mast.),
tains, in Down,	128	the plain of the confluence
Movanagher,	352	(of the Six mile Water and Movilla,	385	L. Neagh).
Moville,	385	Muckanagh,	428
Moy,	309, 385	Muckelty,	428
Moyacomb,	48, 237	Muckenagh,	428
Moyaliff in Tipperary;		Mucker,	428
Magh - Ailbhe (Four		Muckera,	428
Mast.), Ailbhe's or Alva's		Muckery,	428
plain.		Muckinish,	428
Moyard; high plain.		Mucklagh,	428
Moyarget; the plain of		Mucklone, Muckloon; pig silver.		meadow.
Moyarta,	317	Mucknagh,	428
Moycullen in Galway;		Muckno in Monaghan; Muc-
holly plain.		shnamh [Mucknauv], the
Moydow,	309	pig's swimming ford.
Moydrum; the plain of		Muckross,	402
the ridge.		Mucksna; same as Muckno.
Moygawnagh, in Mayo;		Muff,	50
Magh-gamhnach (Book of		Muilrea mountain,	388
L.), the plain of the		Muing; a marshy sedgy
milch cows.		place.
Moyglass; green plain.		Muingaphuca; the pooka's
Moygoish barony,	128	sedge.
Moylan, Moylaun,	361	Muingrevagh; grey sedge.
Moyle,	360	Muingvautia; the drowned
Moyleen,	361	or overflown sedge.
Moyles,	360	Mul,	357
Moylish, Moylisha; the		Mulboy,	358
plain of the fort.		Muldowney at Malahide, . .	91
Moylough; the plain of the		Mulkaun,	358
lake.		Mulkeeragh,	358
Moymlough,	164	Mulla,	357
Moymore; great plain.		Mullacrew in Louth; the
Moynalty,	386	summit of the branchy tree.

	PAGE		PAGE
Mullafarry in Mayo, . . .	192	Mull of Cantire, . . .	361
Mullagh,	357	Mull of Galloway, . . .	361
Mullaghanish mountain, .	427	Mully,	357
Mullaghareirk mountains,	200	Mullycovet,	199
Mullaghattin,	358	Mullykivet,	199
Mullaghbane, Mullagh-		Mullynaveagh,	434
bawn; white summit.		Mulnasheefrog,	173
Mullaghboy; yellow sum-		Mulnaveagh,	434
mit.		Multyfarnham in West-
Mullaghbrack, Mullabrack;		meath; Farannan's mills.
speckled summit.		Munster,	105
Mullaghcarton,	207	Muntermellan,	113
Mullaghcroghery,	204	Munterneese,	113
Mullaghdoo, Mullaghduff;		Munterowen,	113
black summit.		Murlough,	145
Mullaghglass; green summit.		Murragh; same as Murvagh.
Mullaghmeen,	358	Murrisk,	419
Mullaghmore; great summit,		Murrow of Wicklow, . .	419
Mullaghnamoyagh, . . .	21	Murvagh,	419
Mullaghroe; red summit.		Murvey,	419
Mullaghselsana,	202	Muskerry baronies, . .	122
Mullaghshee at Ballyshan-		Mweelahorna,	360
non,	171	Mweelaun,	361
Mullaghshee near Lanes-		Mweelbane,	361
boro',	170	Mweeleen,	361
Mullaghsillogagh,	358	Mweeling,	361
Mullaghtinny,	201	Myshall; Muigh-iseal , low
Mullan,	358	plain.
Mullanaffrin,	110
Mullanagore, Mullanagower,	358	Naan,	23
Mullananallog,	21	Naas,	193
Mullanavannog,	434	Nadanuller,	438
Mullans,	31, 358	Nadnaveagh,	438
Mullarney,	457	Nadneagh,	438
Mullaun,	358	Nafarty,	317
Mullauns,	31, 358	Nantinan; Neantanán , a
Mullen,	344	place of nettles.
Mullenahone in Kilkenny;		Nappagh,	363
see Mullinahone.		Nappan,	363
Mullenakill,	344	Nart,	23
Mullenaranky,	197	Nash,	193
Mullenlupraghaun near Cong,	177	Naul,	23, 24
Mullenmore; great mill.		Navan Fort,	83
Mullin,	344	Ned,	438
Mullinahone in Tipperary,	398	Neddaiaigh,	237
Mullinavat,	344	Neddans,	23

	PAGE		PAGE
Nedeen,	438	Owenass river,	414
Nenagh,	64, 190	Owenboy; yellow river.
Nenagh river,	64	Owenbristy,	399
Nendrum,	133	Owendalulagh river,	229
Newragh,	452	Owenduff; black river.
Newrath,	452	Owennafeana river,	86
New Ross,	442	Owen O'Coffey river,	64
Newry,	451, 452	Oxmantown,	98, 99, 104
Nicker in Limerick,	430	Ox mountains,	53
Nickeres,	430
Ninch,	23	Paps, The,	153, 239
Nobber,	23, 24	Parkatluggera; Pairc-a'-
Nohoval,	25	tslogaire , the field of the
Nooaff; 'n uamh, the cave.		swallowing-hole.
Nooan; 'n uamhan, the cave.		Parkatotaun,	219
Nore river,	23, 26	Parkmore; great field.
Noughaval,	24	Pass of Keimaneigh,	426
Nuenna river,	23	Phale,	328
Nurchossy,	27	Philipstown,	282
Nure,	452	Phoenix Park,	39
Nurney,	295	Phoenix town,	35
Nutfield,	34	Ploopluck,	177
		Pobble O'Keeffe,	194
Offaly,	121	Polfore,	395
Offerlane,	114	Pollacappul; the hole of the
Oghill,	451	horse.
Oghilly,	451	Pollacullaie,	395
Oghly,	451	Polladaossan,	233
Oil, The,	24	Pollagh,	396
Old Leighlin,	391	Pollaginnive,	395
Oltore,	111	Pollahoney,	395
Onagh,	410	Pollakeel,	226
Onan's rock,	145	Pollamore,	226
Oola,	455	Pollanass at Glendalough,	414
Oran,	409	Pollans,	396
Oranmore,	409	Pollaphuca,	175
Oughaval,	25	Poll-da-fhiach,	337
Oughteragh,	249	Polldorragha,	395
Oughterard,	470	Polleens,	396
Oulart,	455	Polleeny,	396
Ounageeragh river,	410	Pollnaranny,	395
Ounagh,	410	Pollrane,	395
Ovens, The,	399	Pollranny,	395
Ovoca river,	73	Pollrone in Kilkenny; Poll-
Ow river,	410	Ruadhain , Ruan's or Ro-
Owbeg river,	410	danus's hole.

	PAGE		PAGE
Pollsillagh; the hole of the sallows.		Raheenanisky,	260
Polltalloon,	396	Raheenduff; black little fort.
Portlaw,	357	Raheenroe,	254
Portmarnock; St. Mernoc's bank or landing-place.		Rahelty; the fort of the doe.
Portnashangan; the bank or landing-place of the pis- mires.		Raheny,	253
Portnasnow,	335	Rahinnane,	144
Portnatrynod,	243	Rahugh in Westmeath; the fort of St. Aedh or Hugh, the son of Brec: built church in the old rath in 6th cent.
Portraine,	103	Raigh,	254
Portrush in Antrim, . . .	402	Rakeeragh; the fort of the sheep.
Portumna,	447	Ralaghan,	447
Pottle,	226	Rallagh,	447
Pottlebane,	226	Ramoan in Antrim; Rath- Modhain , Modan's or Moan's fort.
Pottleboy,	226	Ranacroghy,	204
Poulaculleare,	395	Ranaghan; a ferny place.
Pouladown,	185	Randown,	369
Poulaluppercadaun, . . .	178	Rannagh; a ferny place.
Poultalloon,	396	Raphoe, 145,	280
Preban, Prebaun, Pribbaun; Preabán , a patch.		Rarkanillan,	200
Pubble,	194	Rasharkin; Ros - Earcain (Four Mast.) Earcan's or Erkan's promontory.
Pubblebrien,	194	Rashee,	173
Puckstown,	176	Ratass; Rath-teas , south- ern fort.
Pullagh,	396	Rath,	249
Pullans,	396	Rathangan,	48
Pulleen bay and caves, . .	396	Rathaniska,	260
Pullens in Donegal, . . .	395	Rathanny; the fort of the marsh.
Quilcagh mountain, . . .	5	Rathaspick; the fort of the bishop.
Quilly,	440	Rathbane, Rathbaun; white rath.
Quilty,	440	Rathbarna,	260
Racavan; Rath-cabhain , the fort of the hollow.		Rathbeg; small fort.
Rahan in King's County; Raithin , a ferny place.		Rathborne,	381
Rahaniska, Rahanisky, . .	261	Rathbranagh,	434
Rahard; high fort.		Rathcoole,	41, 85
Raharney,	254
Raheanbo,	244
Raheen,	254
Raheenacrehy,	204
Raheenaniska,	260

	PAGE		PAGE
Rathcormack; Cormac's fort.		Rattoo; Rath - tuaidh , northern fort.
Rathdowney in Queen's County; Rath-Tamhnai-ghe (Four Mast.), the fort of the green field.		Raw,	254
Rathdrum,	253	Raws,	254
Rathduff; black fort.		Ray,	254
Rathfarnham,	41	Rea,	387
Rathfryland,	56	Readoty,	388
Rathgar,	41	Reanabobul,	194
Rathfeigh in Meath; the fort of the faha or green.		Reanabrone,	20
Rathglass; green fort.		Reanagishagh,	388
Rathgormuck; Cormac's fort.		Reanascreena; the plain of the shrine.
Rathkeale in Limerick; Rath - Gacla , Gacla's fort.		Reask; see Reisk.
Rathkenny; Rath-Cheannaigh , Ceannach's fort.		Redchair or Richchair near Ballyorgan in Limerick; a translation of Bearnadhearg , red - gap, a celebrated pass. Sheárd, a W. Eng. term for a gap.
Rathkieran,	139	Red city,	34
Rathleary at Tara,	130	Reen,	369, 371
Rathlin island, . . 73, 103,	104	Reenogrena,	182
Rathmore,	253	Rehill,	388
Rathmoyle,	360	Rehy,	388
Rathmullan; Rath - Mae-lain (Four Mast.), Mae-lain's rath.		Reilig-na-Riogh,	318
Rathnacarton,	207	Reisk,	417
Rathnafushoge,	437	Relagh,	388
Rathnageeragh,	261	Relick,	318
Rathnaneane,	433	Relickmurry,	318
Rathnaseer,	207	Remeen,	388
Rathnew,	253	Revallagh,	341
Rathpoge,	176	Riesk,	417
Rathpuca,	176	Rin,	369, 371
Rathreagh; grey fort.		Rinanagh,	370
Rathroe; red fort.		Rinanny,	370
Rathronan; Ronan's fort.		Rinawade,	209
Rathsallagh; dirty fort.		Rine,	369, 371
Rathtrillick,	243	Rineanna,	369
Rathurd,	252	Rinecaha,	371
Rathurles,	252	Ring,	369
Rathvilla,	462	Ringacoltig,	209
Rathvilly,	462	Ringaphuca; the pooka's point.
		Ringagonagh; Rinn - O - gCuana , the point of the O'Cooneys.

	PAGE		PAGE
Ringaskiddy,	370	of the bonnives or young pigs.
Ringbane, Ringbaun; white point.		Rossolus,	202
Ringcurran,	370	Rossory,	402
Ringfad,	371	Rostollus,	202
Ringhaddy,	370	Roughan; Ruadchán , reddish land.
Ringrone,	370	Rousky; see Rooskey.
Ringsend at Dublin, . . .	370	Ruan; see Rooaun.
Ringvilla,	370	Rusheen, Rusheens, . . .	442
Ringville,	370	Rusk,	417
Rinn,	369, 371	Rusky,	417
Rinneen; little point.		Russagh,	425
Rinrainy island,	371
Rinville in Galway; Rinn-Mhil , the point of Mil, a Firbolg chief.		Saggart,	146
Risk; see Riesk.		Saintfield,	212
Roeillaun; red island.		Saint Mullins,	147
Roemore,	254	Salmon leap on the Liffey,	101
Rooaun, Rooghan, Roogh-aun; reddish land.		Salt baronies,	101
Roosca,	417	Santry near Dublin; Sentreibh (Mart. Taml.), old tribe.
Roosk, Rooska, Rooskagh,	417	Saul,	105
Roosky,	417	Saval,	106
Roscommon,	442	Sawel mountains,	106
Roscrea; Ross-Cre (Book of L.), Cre's wood.		Scalp,	395
Rosdama,	233	Scalpnagoun,	395
Roshin; little promontory.		Scarawalsh, in Wexford, .	35
Roskeen; beautiful wood or promontory.		Scardan, Scardaun; a cataract.
Ross,	402, 442	Scarnageeragh,	330
Rossbegh or Rossbehy, . .	402	Scarragh, Skarragh, . . .	331
Rossbeg; small wood or promontory.		Scarriff,	330
Rossbenchuir,	352	Scarriffhollis,	203
Ross Carbery,	442	Scart,	443
Ross Castle,	502	Scartaglin,	443
Rossdagamph,	53, 238	Scarteen,	443
Rossdama,	233	Scartlea,	443
Rossdanean,	237	Scarva,	331
Rossinver,	402	Scarvy,	331
Rosskreen; beautiful wood.		Scaryhill,	38
Rossmore; great wood or peninsula.		Scota's grave,	154
Rosnamanniff; the wood		Scotland,	81
		Seadavog,	286
		Seaghanbane,	287
		Seaghandoo,	287

	PAGE		PAGE
Seagoe,	286	Sheena,	174
Seapatrick; St. Patrick's seat.		Sheeny,	174
See,	286	Sheegys,	173
Seeconglas,	286	Shee hills,	172
Seefin,	85	Sheehys, The,	172
Seeghane,	286	Sheerevagh,	172
Seehanes,	287	Sheeroe; red fairy-hill.
Seein,	85	Sheetrim,	172
Seeoran,	286	Shelburne,	114
Seirkieran,	139	Shelmaliere,	114
Seltan; a place producing sallows.		Shesharoe,	225
Seskin,	417	Shesheraghkeale,	222
Sess,	225	Shesheraghscanlan,	222
Sessia,	225	Sheshia,	225
Sessiagh,	225	Sheshiv,	225
Shallany,	205	Sheskin,	417
Shallon,	205	Sheskinatawy; the morass of the sorrel.
Shanaclogh; the old stone or stone castle.		Shillelagh,	113
Shanacloon; old meadow.		Shinganagh, Shingannagh; a place, abounding in scan- gans or pismires.
Shanagarry; old garden.		Shinrone,	286
Shanagolden,	465	Shronacarton,	207
Shanakill; old church.		Shrone,	464
Shanavally; old town.		Shronebeha,	464
Shanbally; old town.		Shronedarragh,	55
Shanbo,	280	Shrough,	55, 412
Shanboe,	280	Shruel,	46
Shanbogh,	280	Shrule,	46
Shandon,	259	Sidh-Buidhbbh,	170
Shandrum; old ridge.		Sidh-Truim,	170
Shane, Shanes,	174	Sileshaun,	202
Shangarry; old garden.		Sion,	174
Shankill,	289, 290	Sistrakeel,	222
Shanlongford,	20	Skagh,	457
Shanmullagh; old summit.		Skahanagh,	458
Shannon,	259	Skea,	457
Shannon river,	73	Skeagh,	457
Shantallow; Seantalamh , old land.		Skeaghanore,	457
Shanvally; old town.		Skeanaveane,	86
Shean,	174	Skehanagh,	458
Sheean,	174	Skeheen,	458
Sheeana,	174	Skeheenarinky,	197
Sheeaun,	174	Skelgagh,	383
Sheehaun,	174	Skellig,	383

	PAGE		PAGE
Skenarget,	457	Slieve Lougher,	117
Skeoge,	458	Slieve Margy,	121
Skephubble,	194	Slieve Mish,	348
Skerriff,	330	Slievenacallee; the moun-
Skerries,	382	tain of the hag.
Skerry,	382	Slievemore; great mountain.
Skerrywhirry,	49	Slievenagriddle,	314
Skinstown,	34	Slievenamon,	172
Skreen,	146, 295	Slievenamuck,	428
Skrine,	295	Slieve O'Flynn,	362
Slaght,	59	Slievereagh,	94
Slaghtaverty,	59, 304	Slieveroe; red mountain.
Slaghtfreeden,	59	Slievesnacht,	347
Slaghtmanus,	59	Sligo; named from the river:
Slaghtneill,	59	Sligeach , shelly river.
Slaghtybogy,	95	Sliguff,	53
Slanore in Cavan,	11	Sluggara, Sluggary; a
Sleamaine,	347	swallow-hole.
Sleaty,	339	Slyne Head,	75, 159
Slee,	339	Snamh-da-én,	236
Sleehaun,	340	Snave-bridge near Bantry,	336
Sleemanagh,	339	Solloghod in Tipperary;
Slemish mountain,	349	Solchoid (Four Mast.),
Sleven, Slevin,	348	sallow-wood,
Slevinagee,	348	Sollus,	202
Slieve Anierin,	347	Sonnagh; a mound or ram-
Slieveanilra,	433	part.
Slieveatrua,	243	Spelgagh,	383
Slieve Aughty,	229	Spellickanee,	383
Slievebane, Slievebaun;		Spink,	384
white mountain.		Spinkan,	384
Slievebeagh,	150	Sragh, Srah; a river-holm.
Slievebernagh,	347	Srahatloe,	193
Slievebloom,	155	Srahan, Srahaun, Sraheen;
Slieveboy; yellow hill.		little river-holm.
Slieve Breg,	385	Srananny,	55
Slieve Carbery,	131	Sraud; a street.
Slieve Commedagh,	199	Sroankeeragh,	464
Slieve Corragh; rugged		Sroohill,	46
mountain.		Sroolane,	412
Slieve Daeane,	237	Srooleen,	412
Slieve Donard,	128, 134	Sroghan,	412
Slieve Eelim,	48	Sroughmore; great streamlet.
Slieve Fuad,	154	Srue, Sruh,	412
Slieve Golry,	115	Sruffaun,	413
Slieve League,	379	Srugreana,	55

	PAGE		PAGE
Stabannon,	59	Taduff,	277
Stackallen,	59	Taghadoe,	278
Stackumny,	59	Taghboy,	277
Staholmock; Teach-Mochol- moc , St. Mocholmoc's or Colmoc's house.		Taghboyne,	141
Stakally,	59	Tagheen,	277
Stalleen,	59	Taghmon,	279
Stamullin; Teach-Maelain Maelan's house.		Tallaght,	151
Stang; a measure of land.		Tallow,	356
Stapolin,	59	Tamlaght,	151
Stillorgan,	58	Tamlat,	151
Stirue,	59	Tamnaficarbet,	213
Stonecarthy; Stuam-Charth- aigh , Carthach's stang or measure of land.		Tamnafiglassan,	213
Stonybatter in Dublin, .	42	Tamnagh,	212
Stook,	371	Tamnaghbane,	213
Stookan,	371	Tamnaghvelton,	187
Stookans,	371	Tamny,	212
Stookeen, Stookeens, . .	371	Tamnyagan,	41
Stracashel in Donegal, .	391	Tamnymartin,	213
Stradavoher,	322	Tanderagee,	467
Stradbally,	323	Taney,	213
Stradbrook,	322	Tara,	271
Strade,	322	Tardree,	28
Stradeen,	322	Tarmon; see Termon.
Stradone,	55	Tartan,	365
Stradowan,	55	Tassan,	28
Stradreagh,	322	Tattanafinnell,	108
Straduff; black river-holm.		Tattendillur,	226
Straffan,	413	Tattentlieve,	226
Straid,	322	Tattygare; short tate or land-measure.
Stralustrin,	219	Tattynageeragh,	226
Strancally,	55	Taughboyne,	140
Strangford Lough, . .	98, 99	Taurbeg, Taurmore, . .	272
Stroan,	412	Tavanagh,	213
Strokestown,	34	Tavanaskea,	213
Struell,	46	Tavnaghdrissagh,	213
Sugar Loaf mountain, . .	471	Tavraun,	273
Sunday's Well,	408	Tawlaght,	151
Sylaun; a place producing sallows.		Tawnagh,	213
Syonan,	146	Tawnaghbeg; little field.
Syunchin,	286	Tawnaghmore; great field.
		Tawnakeel,	213
		Tawny,	212
		Tawnybrack,	213
		Tawnygeely,	213
		Tawran,	272

	PAGE		PAGE
Tecolm; Tigh-Choluim , St.		The Squince,	425
Columba's house.		Three Gneeves,	225
Teebane,	277	Thurles,	252
Teemore,	277	Tiaquin,	279
Teevnabinnia,	467	Tibberaghny in Kilkenny;
Teltown,	154, 188	Tiobrad - Fachtna , St.
Templebredon,	292	Fachtna's well.
Templebreedy; St. Brigid's		Tibohine,	140
church.		Tibraddan,	277
Templecarn,	292	Ticknick,	349
Temple-etney,	292	Ticknock,	349
Templemichael,	292	Tievebrack; speckled hill-
Templemolaga,	142	side.
Templemore,	293	Tievedeevan,	196
Templemoyle,	360	Tievenavarnoge,	467
Templenacarriga; the church		Tiglin in Wicklow; the of the rock.		house of the glen.
Templenahurney,	295	Tikincor,	336
Templenaskellig,	383	Tiknock; see Ticknock.
Templenoe, Templenew;		Timahoe,	279
new church.		Timogue in Queen's
Templepatrick,	89	County; St. Mogue's
Templeport; the church of		house.
the port or bank.		Timoleague; St. Malaga's
Templeshanbo,	280	house (see p. 142.)
Templetogher,	342	Timolin,	147
Templetuohy,	292	Timpan, Timpaun,	367
Tempo,	28	Timpany,	367
Tennies,	201	Tinamuck; pig-house.
Tennyphobble,	201	Tincurragh,	277
Tents,	201	Tincurry,	278
Termon; church-land . . .		Tinnahinch,	277
Termonfeckin; St. Fechin's		Tinnakill, Tinnakilly; the church-land.		house of the church or
Terryglass,	228	wood.
Terryland,	56	Tinnascart, Tinnascarty, .	278
Tethmoy,	234	Tinnick,	349
Tevrin,	273	Tinoran,	409
The Braid,	465	Tintore,	218
The Faes of Athlone, . . .	441	Tipper,	408
The Hassans in Donegal;		Tipperary,	408
Na heasdin , the assans or		Tipperkevin,	408
little waterfalls.		Tipperstown,	408
The Oil,	24	Tiranascragh; the land of
The Ovens near Cork, . . .	399	the esker or ridge of sand-
The Sheehys,	172	hills.

	PAGE		PAGE
Tirawly barony,	129	Tonlegee,	467
Tirconnell,	131	Tonnagh; a mound or ram-
Tireragh barony,	129	part.
Tirerrill barony,	129	Tonregee,	467
Tirfinnóg,	434	Tonroe,	466
Tirkeeran barony,	128	Tonn-Cleena,	182
Tisaran,	33	Tooman,	309
Tisaxon; the house of the		Toombeola,	350
Saxon or Englishman.		Toome,	307
Tiscoffin,	51	Toomog,	309
Tithewer,	218	Toomore, Toomour,	239
Tlaghtga,	188	Toomyvara,	308
Tober,	407	Toor,	217
Toberaheena,	408	Tooraleagan,	316
Toberatasha,	181	Toorard; high bleach-green.
Toberawnaun,	146	Tooreen,	217
Toberbilly,	408	Tooreennablauha,	217
Toberbunny,	408	Tooreennagrena,	217
Toberburr,	46	Toorfune,	217
Tober Canvore,	96	Toormore; great bleachgreen.
Tobercurry,	407	Toornageeha,	217
Tobereevil,	183	Toortane,	365
Toberfinnick,	434	Toralt,	364
Toberloona,	89	Torc mountain,	429
Toberlownagh,	408	Tormore,	364
Tobermolaga,	142	Tornaroy,	364
Tobermore,	407	Tory Island,	151, 364
Tobernabrone,	344	Touaghty,	93
Tobernagalt,	161	Tourin; see Tooreen.
Tobernapeasta,	185	Towerbeg, Towermore,	272
Toberreendoney,	408	Towlaght,	151
Togher,	342	Towlett,	151
Tomcoyle,	39	Trakieran,	140
Tomdeely,	308	Tralee,	403
Tomfinlough,	308	Tralong,	209
Tomgraney,	308	Tramore,	403
Tomies mountain,	309	Trawnamaddree,	403
Tomnahulla,	311	Trean,	223
Tomregan,	39	Treanamullin,	223
Tonagh,	212	Treanfohanaun,	224
Tonaghmore,	213	Treanlaur,	224
Tonaghneeve,	212	Treanmanagh,	224
Tonanilt,	354	Trevet,	123
Tonbaun,	466	Trienaltenagh,	224
Tonduff,	466	Trillick,	242
Toneel,	466	Trillickacurry,	242

	PAGE		PAGE
Trillickatemple,	242	Tullyhog,	195
Trim,	456	Tullyhought,	244
Trimmer,	456	Tullyland,	56
Tromaun,	456	Tullylease; Tulach - lias , the hill of the huts.
Trumman,	456	Tullyloughdaugh,	238
Trummer,	456	Tullymongan at Cavan,	355
Trummery,	456	Tullymore; great hill.
Tuam,	284	Tullynacross; the hill of the cross.
Tubbrid,	408	Tullynagardy,	207
Tulla,	355	Tullynagrow,	47
Tullagh,	355	Tullynahearka,	198
Tullaghacullion,	355	Tullynaskeagh; the hill of the bushes.
Tullaghan,	356	Tullynure; the hill of the yew.
Tullaghans,	356	Tullyroe; red hill.
Tullaghaun,	356	Tullyrusk,	417
Tullaghcullion,	355	Tullytrasna; cross-hill.
Tullaghmelan in Tipperary; Moylan's hill.		Tullytullagh,	311
Tullaghoge in Tyrone,	195	Tummery,	28
Tullaha; Tulcha , hills.		Tuosist; Tuath-O'Siosta, O'Siosta's territory.
Tullamaine; middle hill.		Turagh,	28
Tullamore; great hill.		Ture; an tiubhar ; the yew. See pp. 28, 452.
Tullanacrunat; the hill of the wheat.		Turlough,	406
Tullanavert,	355	Turtane,	365
Tullans,	356	Twelve Pins,	350
Tullantanty,	279	Two Gneeves,	225
Tullantintin,	202	Tyfarnham in Westmeath; Farannan's or Arannan's house (see Multyfarn- ham).
Tullen,	356	Tymon,	279
Tullig,	356	Tyone,	277
Tullin,	356	Tyrella,	59
Tullintloy,	193	Tyrone,	130
Tulow,	122, 355
Tulowphelim,	122	Ullanes, Ullauns,	312
Tully,	355	Ulster,	104
Tullyallen,	33	Ulusker,	311
Tullyard; high hill.		Ummera,	359
Tullycullion,	355	Ummeraboy,	359
Tullybane, Tullybaun; white hill.		Ummeracam, Umrycam,	359
Tullybeg; small hill.
Tullycorbet; the hill of the chariot.
Tullyglass; green hill.
Tullyglush,	411
Tullyhaw barony,	114

	PAGE		PAGE
Ummerafree,	359	Ventry,	403
Ummery, Umry,	359	Ventry harbour,	161
Unshinagh,	448
Unshog,	448	Ward, Hill of,	188
Upper Third,	223	Wateresk,	470
Uragh,	452	Watergrasshill,	34
Urbal; a tail, from shape.		Waterford,	98, 99
Urbalshinny; the fox's		Wexford,	98, 99
tail.		Wicklow,	99, 100
Urcher,	156	Windy-gap,	394
Uregare in Limerick; short		Winetavern-street in Dub-
yew (see p. 451.)		lin,	322
Urney, Urny,	27, 294	Witter,	470
Usnagh hill,	186	Wood of O,	36
Valentia island,	446	Yellow Batter,	42
Vartry river,	115	Youghal,	451

INDEX OF ROOT-WORDS.

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
Abh,	409	Bealltaine, . . .	186	Cairthe,	315
Abhainn, . . .	409	Beann,	349	Caiseal,	263
Abhall,	455	Beannchar, . . .	352	Caislén,	281
Achadh,	213	Beannaighthe, . .	100	Capall,	425
Adharc,	198	Bearn, Bearn, . .	394	Carn,	305
Aebhell,	182	Beith,	448	Carr,	381
Aen,	244	Bél,	328	Carraig,	372
Aenach,	189	Bile,	461	Cartron,	225
Aiffrionn, . . .	57, 109	Biorar,	46	Casán,	341
Aileach,	270	Bladhmán,	196	Cath,	107
Aill,	371	Bo,	422	Cathair,	261
Aireagal,	294	Boireann,	380	Cead,	244
Airne,	457	Both,	279	Ceallurach, . . .	291
Aiteann,	458	Bóthar,	42, 338	Cealtrach,	291
Aith,	345	Bouchail,	194	Ceann,	205, 463
Aitheach-Tuatha, .	93	Braghad,	464	Ceapach,	210
Alt,	353	Bran,	434	Ceard,	206
Altóir,	111	Bréach,	431	Cearda, Ceard-
Ar,	108	Bri,	356	cha,	207
Ard,	352	Bro,	344	Ceathramhadh, . .	224
Arracht,	181	Broc,	432	Ceis,	332
Ath,	41, 325	Brocach,	432	Ceol-sidhe, . . .	178
Bád,	209	Brugh,	264	Cether,	244
Badhun,	283	Buaile,	220	Cill,	288
Baile,	318	Buirghes,	323	Clann,	113
Baile-biataigh, . .	221	Bun,	469	Clár,	388
Baisleac,	297	Cabhán,	365	Clais,	110
Barc,	209	Cadhan,	436	Cliath,	333
Barr,	469	Caera,	424	Clíodhna,	181
Bealach,	340	Caerthainn, . . .	452	Cloch,	374
				Clochan,	334

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
Cloch-tógbhala,	314	Da,	227	Farrach,	192
Cluain,	214	Daingean,	282	Fásach,	442
Cluiche,	196	Dair,	444	Feadán,	413
Cluricane,	177	Dairbhre,	446	Feadóg,	435
Cnap,	363	Daire or Doire,	445	Feannóg,	434
Cnoc,	47, 51, 348	Dál,	80, 118	Feara,	115
Cobhlach,	208	Damh,	41, 58, 424	Feárn, Fearnóg,	454
Coigeadh,	224	Dealbh,	180	Fearsad,	331
Coill,	37, 439	Deamhan,	185	Fert, Ferta,	316
Coimhead,	199	Dearc or dere,	396	Fiach,	434
Coinicér,	430	Dearmhagh,	12	Fíadh,	426
Coinín,	430	Diabhal,	185	Fíanna Ereann,	84
Coirthe,	315	Diomhaein,	196	Fidh,	439, 440
Coll,	453	Disert,	298	Fionghal,	108
Comán,	199	Domhnach,	293	Fionnuisge,	39
Comar,	57, 413	Draeighean,	456	Fir,	115
Congbhail,	24	Droichead,	337	Foghmhar,	186
Cor,	362	Druim,	465	Ford,	98, 99
Cora, Coradh,	336	Dubh,	230	Fórnocht,	365
Core, Corca,	128	Duibhlinn,	334	Forrach,	192
Corcach,	415	Dullaghan,	180	Fraech,	458
Corr,	435	Dumha,	309	Fuaran,	409
Cos,	468	Dún,	73, 254	Fuath,	181
Cot,	209			Fuinnse, Fuinns-
Craebh,	462	Each,	425	eann, Fuinns-
Craig,	373	Eaglais,	291	eóg,	447
Crann,	460	Eanach,	415	Fuiseóg,	437
Crannóg,	275	Earrach,	186
Creabhar,	437	Eas, Ess,	414	Gabhal,	470
Creamh,	57	Edar,	231	Gabhar,	426
Creamhchoill,	37	Eidhneán,	459	Gaertha,	443
Croch,	204	Eilit,	427	Gáire,	196
Crochaire,	204	Eisc,	405	Gáll,	87, 316
Cromlech,	312	Eiscir,	366	Gallán,	315
Cros,	300	En,	433	Gallon,	226
Cruach,	354	Eó,	450	Gaeth,	41
Cruit,	362	Eochaill,	37, 451	Garrán,	444
Cruithne,	92	Eudan,	464	Gárrdha,	211
Cu,	429	Ey,	98	Gealt,	161
Cuach,	436			Gédh,	435
Cúas,	397	Fael,	431	Geimhridh,	186
Cúil,	472	Faeileán, Faeil-		Glaise, Glais,	411
Cuillionn,	452	eóg,	434	Gleann,	389
Cúm,	393	Fáil,	120	Gníomh,	225
Cumar,	413	Fáill,	371	Góbha,	206
Curach,	208, 416	Fáithche,	273	Gort,	211

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
Grafán, . . .	218	Lug, . . .	392	Poll, . . .	226, 395
Graig, . . .	323	Luppercudán, .	177	Pottle, . . .	226
Grian, . . .	269, 308	Luprachán, . .	177	Préachán, . .	433
Grianan, . . .	269	Lurga, Lurgan, .	468	Púca, . . .	175
Guala, . . .	465	Lúricán, . . .	177
		Lurrigadán, . .	177	Radharc, . . .	200
Imleach, . . .	418			Raidhe, . . .	115
Inbhear, . . .	413	Machaire, . . .	387	Rail, Rál, . . .	447
Inis, . . .	399	Mac-tíre, . . .	431	Rath, . . .	41, 249, 252
Iochdar, . . .	470	Madadh, Madradh, .	429	Réidh, . . .	387
Iolar, . . .	433	Madhm, . . .	164	Reilig, . . .	318
Iomaire, . . .	358	Maeil, . . .	92	Ríasc, . . .	417
Iubhar, . . .	450, 451	Mael, . . .	359	Rince or Rinceadh, .	197
		Maethail, . . .	418
Lacha, . . .	436	Magadh, . . .	196	Rinn, . . .	369
Ladhar, . . .	471	Mágh, . . .	50, 51, 384	Ros, . . .	402, 442
Laegh, . . .	423	Mantan, . . .	100	Rúag, . . .	107
Lag, . . .	392	Mantach, . . .	101	Rúsg, . . .	417
Lagh, . . .	356	Más, . . .	467
Laighen, . . .	87	Míliuc, . . .	419	Sabhall, . . .	105
Lann, . . .	295	Móin, . . .	420	Saer, . . .	207
Láthair, . . .	285	Móinteán, . . .	38	Samhradh, . . .	186
Lathrach, . . .	284	Móintín, . . .	38	Samhuin, . . .	188
Lax, . . .	101	Móta, . . .	268	Scairbh, . . .	330
Leaba or Leabaidh, .	313	Móthar, . . .	274	Scairt, . . .	443
Leac, Lic, Liag, . .	378	Muc, . . .	427	Sceach, . . .	457
Leacán, . . .	380	Muilenn, . . .	57, 343	Scealp, . . .	395
Leacht, . . .	57, 59, 310	Muine, . . .	443	Sceamh, . . .	57
Leamb, Leamhán, . .	449	Muintir, . . .	113	Sceilig, . . .	383
Leamhchoill, . . .	37	Muirisc, . . .	419	Sceir, . . .	382
Leárg, . . .	367	Mullach, . . .	357	Scoti, . . .	81
Leath, . . .	222	Murbhach, . . .	419	Scrín, . . .	295
Leathárd, . . .	353			Seabhac, . . .	433
Léim, . . .	158	Nás, . . .	193	Sealán, . . .	205
Leithinsi, . . .	401	Ne, . . .	117	Sealg, . . .	198
Leiter, . . .	368	Nead, . . .	438	Seiseadh, . . .	225
Leprechan, . . .	177	Nuachongbhail, .	24	Seisreach, . . .	222
Liagán, . . .	316			Sescenn, . . .	417
Liathmhuine, . . .	443	Og, . . .	195	Siabhra, . . .	177
Lios, . . .	249	Oglach, . . .	195	Sidh, Sith, . . .	167
Loch, . . .	405	Oilean, Oilen, . .	401	Sidheán, . . .	174
Loisgreán, . . .	218	Ore, . . .	98, 99	Sidheóg, . . .	172
Loisgthe, . . .	219	Os, . . .	427	Siol, . . .	113
Lon, Londubh, . . .	437			Sionnach, . . .	432
Lóng, . . .	209	Piast, . . .	185	Sleamhán, . . .	449
Longphort, . . .	276	Pobul, . . .	194	Slíabh, . . .	346

	PAGE		PAGE		PAGE
Slidhe,	339	Taimhleacht, . .	151	Tri,	241
Sluagh,	193	Taise,	181	Tríán,	223
Smól, Smólach, .	437	Tamhnach, . . 41,	212	Tricha,	221
Snámh,	335	Tarbh,	423	Tromm,	564
Soillse,	202	Tate, Tath, . . .	226	Tuaim,	307
Soillseán, . . .	202	Teach, . . 33, 57,	277	Tuar,	217
Solas,	202	Tealach,	114	Tuath,	115
Speilic,	383	Teamhair,	271	Tulach, . . . 33,	355
Spinc,	383	Teampull,	292
Sradbhaile, . . .	323	Teine,	201	Ua,	114
Sráid,	322	Teótán,	219	Uachdar,	469
Srón,	464	Tígh,	33, 57	Uachongbhail, . .	24
Sruth,	411	Tiobrad,	408	Uagh, Uath, Uaimh,
Sruthair, . . 46,	412	Tiompán,	367		397
Sruthán,	51	Tober,	407	Uamhainn,	399
Ster,	99, 104	Tóchar,	342	Uaran,	409
Stuaic,	371	Tón,	466	Ubhall,	455
Súgach,	196	Tor,	364	Uisce,	404
Suidhe,	285	Torc,	438	Uladh,	310
		Tradhnach	435	Urchur,	166
Taebh,	467	Traigh, Tracht, .	403	Urnaidhe,	294

THE END.

GALWEY &
BOOKBIN
22
Eustace
DUBLIN

Joyce, Patrick W.

The Origin and History of Irish Names of Places

Bd.: 1

Dublin 1869

Brit. 310 s-1

urn:nbn:de:bvb:12-bsb10280435-1